Acknowledgments

Ignatius writes at several points about those who have refreshed him, and, although writing in a more comfortable setting, I am also glad of the opportunity at the end of the writing process to be able to thank those who have refreshed me.

This book began as a PhD thesis at the University of Otago. I am particularly grateful for the excellent supervisory work that I received from Paul Trebilco and James Harding. Paul's scholarship provides a model from which I have learned much and which I hope to have emulated in my own small way in the pages that follow. His willingness to read multiple drafts, quick turn-around times, and probing, big-picture questions lifted this study out of the mire of vaguely interesting observations about previous scholarship. James's attention to detail and help with languages not only saved me from countless embarrassing mistakes but also made this study more precise. Any errors that remain are of course my own.

My examiners also offered encouragements and suggestions for how to improve the manuscript when revising. I am grateful to Paul Foster, Paul Hartog, and Thomas Robinson for taking the time to examine this thesis and to David Tombs for convening the examination. I would like to thank Jörg Frey and the other editors for accepting the manuscript into the second series of the Wissenschaftliche Untersuchungen zum Neuen Testament. I am likewise grateful to Klaus Hermannstädter for his interest in the project from an early stage and assistance throughout the project. He, Elena Müller, Henning Ziebritzki, and the team at Mohr Siebeck have made this book a reality. For their work, I am very appreciative.

The Department of Theology and Religion at the University of Otago was a friendly and supportive environment in which to study. I am thankful to those in the departmental seminars for hearing and commenting on drafts of my research. The Aotearoa New Zealand Association for Biblical Studies was a helpful and encouraging place to try out new ideas, and I appreciate their willingness to shelter this relocated American. The resourcefulness of the university's librarians, particularly the Interloans staff led by Jacinda Boivin, is much appreciated as they have often located obscure journal articles with limited information.

Interactions with others who study early Christianity have given this project a timely boost. Richard Bauckham, Martin Bauspieß, Dirk Jongkind, and Gregory Vall have given generously of their time to hear or read semi-coherent thoughts-in-progress. An exchange between the Otago Theology Department and the Evangelisches Stift in Tübingen facilitated my research by offering a chance to improve my German and by granting access to a first-class theological library. I am grateful to Professor Drecoll for overseeing my time there.

Conversations with fellow PhD students offered opportunities to share and receive help on this project as well as everyday matters in life. I am thankful for the daily lunches in the Humanities Common Room and the weekly pint at Eureka. I am especially thankful to Jonathan and Tess Hicks, who offered me a place to stay when I first arrived in Dunedin and insured that I settled in well, and to Nick Brennan, Malcolm Falloon, Luke Hoselton, Josh Hurd, and Jono Ryan, whose conversations urged me to look at both research and life with fresh eyes. Likewise, the support of friends from Christ the King Anglican Church in Birmingham, Alabama gave me a base from which I could work and to which I could seamlessly return. For this, I am grateful to Father Lyle and Mary Dorsett, the group that met for coffee at O'Henry's, and friends like Kyle and Melissa Clark, Kyle Logan, Erin and Jeff Martin, Matthew Neely, Michael and Jennifer Novotny, Bethany Rushing, and David and Andrea Tew.

Finally, this project would neither have started nor been completed without the generous support of my family. Meeting and marrying Jieun was the most joyous discovery of my time in Dunedin, and her selfless giving, inquiring mind, and novel perspectives have not only improved the book but life itself. Despite being younger, Joel and Chantelle have in many ways been a step ahead of me in life and have set an example for how things should be, while Chloe and Harper have added much joy to our weekly Skype sessions. Lastly, my parents, Fred and Charlene, have given financially and emotionally to my education for as long as I can remember. They have sacrificed much to bring me up and have encouraged me to pursue thoughts broadly and deeply. I am grateful, and this study is dedicated to them.

Chapter 1

Points of Departure

1.1. Introduction

It is nearly impossible to overestimate the significance of Jesus in the letters of Ignatius of Antioch. Although there is a small amount of textual ambiguity about precise phrases and word order, combinations of the words Ἰησοῦς, Χριστός, and κύριος appear roughly 140 times in seven letters.<sup>1</sup> Jesus is also referred to as “our hope” (ἡ ἐλπὶς ἡμῶν; Magn. 11), his flesh and blood are associated with faith and love (Trall. 8.1), and Jesus’s suffering and death provide the model for Ignatius’s own suffering and anticipated death as he is escorted across Asia by his Roman guards (Rom. 3.2–3; 5.1; 6.3).<sup>2</sup> In addition, Ignatius designates Jesus as θεός on multiple occasions,<sup>3</sup> links him uniquely with the Father, and emphatically insists, often in polemical contexts, that Jesus was simultaneously fully in the flesh during his time on earth.<sup>4</sup> To put it succinctly, “Ignatius embraces a high Christology.”<sup>5</sup>

Jesus is also closely associated with the people who follow him. Ignatius prays that Magnesian Christians can share in the unity of the Father and Jesus

<sup>1</sup> A similar count is given by Paul Foster that includes “fairly standard Christological title[s]” along with references to Jesus by name (“Christ and the Apostles in the Epistles of Ignatius of Antioch,” in Early Christians between Ideal and Reality, ed. Mark Grundeken and Joseph Verheyden, WUNT 342 [Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2015], 116n.14).

<sup>2</sup> Callie Callon is right to argue that Ignatius’s use of the term λέοπάρδοι in Rom. 5.1 is an insult rather than a reference to a military regiment (“A Re-examination of Ignatius’ Use of the Term ‘Leopards,’” JTS 66 [2015]: 585–595). This suggests treatment that might properly be described as “beastly.” Due to the high number of citations from Ignatius’s letters, the authorial prefix “Ign.” has been omitted. Ignatius’s letters to the Ephesians and Romans are abbreviated as “Eph.” and “Rom.,” while “Eph.” and “Rom.” stand for the letters in the New Testament of the same name. Similarly, “Pol. Phil.” refers to Polycarp’s Philippians, while “Pol.” denotes Ignatius’s Polycarp and “Phil.” designates Paul’s letter to Philippi.

<sup>3</sup> Eph. inscr.: 1.1; 7.2; 15.3; 18.2; 19.3; Trall. 7.1; Rom. inscr. (twice); 3.3; 6.3; Smyrn. 1.1; 10.1; Pol. 8.3.

<sup>4</sup> E.g. Eph. 7.2; 18.2–19.1; Magn. 11; Trall. 9.1–2; Smyrn. 1.1–3.3; Pol. 3.2.

<sup>5</sup> Gregory Vall, Learning Christ: Ignatius of Antioch and the Mystery of Redemption (Washington, DC: Catholic University of America Press, 2013), 97. Similarly, J. N. D. Kelly writes, “The centre of Ignatius’s thinking was Christ” (Early Christian Doctrines, 3rd ed. [London: Black, 1965], 92).

(Magn. 1.2), while Jesus is depicted as a co-bishop with his Father when Ignatius writes to Polycarp (Pol. inscr.). Jesus's significance for the church becomes clear when looking at Ignatius's ecclesial typology.<sup>6</sup> Jesus is a type of the deacons in the heavenly ecclesiology, while the Father is connected to the bishop and the apostles to the elders (Magn. 6.1; Trall. 2.1–3.1). Yet Ignatius's typology is not employed consistently. Rather, it tells of the heavenly presence that Ignatius expected in ecclesial life while resisting strictly consistent identifications. Thus Jesus's presence in the church extends further than his connection with the deacons alone. Bishops are in the mind of Christ (Eph. 3.2), obedience to the presbyters is linked with the law of Jesus Christ (Magn. 2), and "wherever Christ Jesus is, there is the catholic church" (ὅπου ἂν ᾗ Χριστὸς Ἰησοῦς, ἐκεῖ ἡ καθολικὴ ἐκκλησία; Smyrn. 8.2). Jesus's connection to bishops, presbyters, deacons, and the entire church indicate that Ignatius's typology is not absolutely consistent.

The connections between Jesus and his people are tightened by Ignatius's use of paired metaphors. For example, Jesus is ὁ καινὸς ἄνθρωπος (Eph. 20.1) and ὁ τέλειος ἄνθρωπος (Smyrn. 4.2). In turn, Ignatius expects that in his own death, he will be truly ἄνθρωπος (Rom. 6.2). Jesus and Ignatius are thus connected by a specific term in addition to Ignatius's imitation of his suffering and death. This study situates itself alongside other studies of Christology and ecclesiology in the Ignatian epistles by examining another set of paired metaphors: the high priest and the temple. Jesus is referred to as high priest only in Phld. 9.1. Ignatius's use of the term rarely receives much attention, while Stark claims more emphatically that Ignatius's use of the term ἀρχιερεύς "has not much significance to it."<sup>7</sup> Yet Ignatius employs the metaphors of high priest and door in the midst of a discussion in which he outlines the relation between the gospel and Jewish scripture as well as the role of the prophets. Moreover, there is a polemical edge to Ignatius's writing as he recounts a disagreement that he had with at least some in Philadelphia.

Only a few sentences before he speaks of Jesus as high priest, Ignatius calls the Philadelphians a temple (ναός; Phld. 7.2). The Philadelphians are to be unified with their bishop and otherwise behave in such a way as to demonstrate that they are God's temple. The rhetorical connections and role played by the high priest and temple in the argument of the letter remain to be worked out fully in chapters 3 and 4. For now it is enough to note that high priests and temples function within similar conceptual worlds. A high priest offers much of his or her service to a deity in temples. The two often go together. That these metaphors appear relatively close to one another in the same letter should raise questions about whether or not they work together in the argument.

Although Ignatius refers to Jesus as high priest only once in his letters, he refers to his audience as temples on three other occasions. Two of these references come in the same letter. The Ephesians are described as stones of the temple (Eph. 9.1), while in another passage each of the Ephesians comprises a temple individually (Eph. 15.3). In addition, some of the Ephesians serve as temple-bearers (ναοφόροι) in a processional metaphor (Eph. 9.2). Jesus is not spoken of as high priest anywhere in this letter. However, chapters 5 and 6 will argue that he is present in each of these three metaphors. Similarly, Magn. 7.2 positions Jesus and the temple, along with an altar, as objects toward which the Magnesians are instructed to run. Again, Jesus is not described as a high priest, but he is once more present in connection with Ignatius's temple imagery.

This study explores the relationship between Jesus and the temple by working from the pairing of the high priestly and temple metaphors in Phld. 7.2–9.1. From this, the study will work methodically to describe Jesus's role within the temple in other letters. By paying close attention to these two metaphors, the study contributes a historically and literarily focused exploration of Ignatius's Christology and ecclesiology and may be of use to future attempts to study the way in which Ignatius understands Jesus and his followers.

Finally, this study touches on similar imagery in surrounding literature within Ignatius's milieu. To attempt to integrate all of the sources that could shed light on Ignatius's use of the temple metaphor would extend this volume unnecessarily. For example, Allen Brent has made a strong case for reading Ignatius alongside other Greek rhetors and inscriptions from the Second Sophistic movement.<sup>8</sup> This rhetorical development was especially popular in Greece and Asia Minor and stretched from the late-first to early-third centuries CE. Brent finds the most striking similarities with literature in the first half of the second century.<sup>9</sup> While a discussion of Ignatius's conceptual background is not the primary aim of this study, brief examinations of certain early Jewish and early Christian texts may help in understanding Ignatius's letters by offering more or less contemporaneous comparative material from related movements that interacted with early Christianity in at least some instances over the course of the first two centuries CE. Although such comparison may deserve further attention in due course, the partial analysis in this study is intended to

1.2. Literature Review

As this compressed allusion to Brent reveals, however, this study is one of many that have taken up Ignatius's letters. In addition to commentaries and monographs devoted to Ignatius's thought,<sup>10</sup> narrower studies regarding Ignatius's understanding of episcopacy, the social world described in his letters, and his role in the parting of the ways have also added significantly to studies of Christian origins.<sup>11</sup> Yet less has appeared with a direct focus on the high priestly and temple imagery. Two sets of studies may be mentioned briefly.

1.2.1. High Priestly Metaphors

To begin with, the role of Jesus as high priest in Phld. 9.1 has been explored in several articles by Ferdinando Bergamelli and a recent study by Ole Jakob Filtvedt and Martin Wessbrandt.

1.2.1.1. Ferdinando Bergamelli

Although Bergamelli includes the reference to the high priest in Phld. 9.1 as part of his investigation into Jesus's mediatorial role in Ignatius's thought, he focuses on the image of the door rather than the high priest.<sup>12</sup> He rightly connects his interpretation to the discussion of the gospel and archives in Phld. 8.2,<sup>13</sup> and he views Jesus as the mediator and door through which everyone must access the Father.<sup>14</sup> "Tutti coloro quindi che vogliono arrivare alla vera conoscenza del Padre, devono 'entrare per mezzo di questa Porta.'"<sup>15</sup> Bergamelli's focus on Jesus as an intermediary will prove instructive to the study of Jesus as high priest in chapter 3. However, the metaphor of high priest is secondary to his purposes because his articles explore the image of the door more fully. In addition, the temple metaphors are largely left out, leaving the relationship between the two metaphors unexamined.

1.2.1.2. Ole Jakob Filtvedt and Martin Wessbrandt

Filtvedt and Wessbrandt have likewise taken up Phld. 9.1 in their study of Jesus's high priesthood in early Christian texts. They correctly note that Ignatius utilizes the metaphors in order to speak about revelation, that is, the way in which God is made known to the Philadelphians.<sup>16</sup> Jesus thus provides access to God. However, one of the chief aims of the article is to ask "what hypothesis would best explain the similarities as well as the independence" that Hebrews, 1 Clement, Phld. 9.1, Polycarp's Philippians, and the Martyrdom of Polycarp display.<sup>17</sup> Their preferred hypothesis is liturgical use. Although the suggestion is plausible, the sights of the study that follows are set primarily on Ignatius's own usage of the priestly and temple metaphors. While the question of how early Christian priestly imagery developed is interesting, it is not the question that this monograph seeks to engage. Rather, I am interested primarily in how Ignatius's priestly depiction of Jesus occurs in his own letters and only secondarily in comparing Ignatius's use of this metaphor with other early Christian usage. The question of how similar imagery developed across early Christian literature is left for other studies.

1.2.2. Temple Metaphors

Two scholars have given more attention to the place of temple metaphors in Ignatius's letters while also studying the interaction between priestly and temple language together.<sup>18</sup>

1.2.2.1. Peter Legarth

The only monograph that treats the topic of Ignatius's temple metaphors is Peter Legarth's 1992 thesis from the University of Lund that was published in Menighedsfakultetets Videnskabelige Serie.<sup>19</sup> In addition to the Danish thesis and English summary at the end of the monograph, Legarth published a condensed version of his arguments in a 1996 journal article.<sup>20</sup> After noting the close relationship between Christology and ecclesiology in the New Testament,<sup>21</sup> he outlines expectations for a new temple in early Jewish texts and the New Testament.<sup>22</sup> He finds that there is consistently only one God who is predicated of the temple, although this God may be referred to in a number of ways, including θεός, יהוה, שם, and כבוד.<sup>23</sup> Messianic figures are not prominent in the depictions of the new temple, and Legarth finds that God is both the builder of the temple and the one who is to be worshipped there.<sup>24</sup>

<sup>18</sup> David J. Downs has also noted recently that the temple images are used for the corporate union of believers but leaves space to develop the study of the metaphors ("The Pauline Concept of Union with Christ in Ignatius of Antioch," in The Apostolic Fathers and Paul, ed. Todd D. Still and David E. Wilhite, PPSD 2 [London: Bloomsbury T&T Clark, 2017], 160n.49).

<sup>24</sup> Although the Messiah is the builder of the temple in Sib.Or. 5.422–425, Legarth notes that this passage is balanced by the portrayal of God as the maker of the temple (Sib.Or. 5.433; Legarth, Guds tempel, 19; idem, "Tempelsymbolik," 39). Likewise, although Jesus is the God who dwells among people as the Word (John 1.14), when he refers to his body as

The theocentric presentations of the temple continue in Ignatius's writings in which the temple belongs to God (Eph. 9.1–2; 15.3; Magn. 7.2; Phld. 7.2). Yet Ignatius's theocentric depiction of the temple becomes more complex, since he likewise refers to Jesus as θεός.<sup>25</sup> This comes as part of Ignatius's answer to a central question in early Christianity, namely, who is Jesus? For Ignatius, theology is Christocentric.<sup>26</sup> A central finding of Legarth's study develops when Ignatius's understanding of Jesus as θεός comes into contact with his theocentric presentation of the temple. According to Legarth, whereas messianic figures play an unobtrusive role in the temples of early Jewish and early Christian texts that precede Ignatius, Jesus is a vital figure in the temple metaphors found in Ignatius's letters. Yet his role in the temple is not always consistent, and this creates "et spændingsforhold mellem tempelsymbolisme og kristologien."<sup>27</sup> The tension arises from a theocentric temple metaphor on the one hand, and a Christology that portrays Jesus as both God and subordinate to the Father on the other. Legarth claims that Ignatius does not predicate θεός of Jesus in the passages in which he is portrayed as obedient to the Father, and this is due to Jesus's subordinate role in the temple.<sup>28</sup> Jesus is not referred to as θεός in the temple metaphors of Eph. 9.1–2, Magn. 7.2, or Phld. 7.2, but he is described as θεός in Eph. 15.3. According to Legarth, temple symbolism thus plays both a catalyzing and a reductive role in Ignatius's Christology as it provokes Ignatius to refer to Jesus as God in some passages, while it constrains him elsewhere to speak of Jesus as a mediator or high priest.<sup>29</sup>

Legarth's monograph is a tightly argued analysis not only of Ignatius's temple and priestly metaphors but also of related cultic language. It is thoroughly researched and well-versed in the relevant early Jewish and early Christian texts that can shed light on Ignatius's metaphor. The interpretations of particular Ignatian passages often demonstrate sensitivity and shed light on these underexplored images in the Ignatian corpus. However, little attention is given to the rhetorical flow of Ignatius's letters. For example, the treatment of ναός

Gilliam argues that at least some of these references bear the marks of fourth-century debates over Jesus's identity (Ignatius of Antioch and the Arian Controversy, VCSup 140 [Leiden: Brill, 2017], 11–28). While Gilliam's proposal deserves further attention, I simply note here that Ignatius refers to Jesus as θεός at multiple points in the middle recension.

in Eph. 9.1 and 15.3 is separated by a study of Phld. 7.2–8.1, while the treatment of the temple in Phld. 7.2 comes early in Legarth’s examination but the high priest of Phld. 9.1 is placed at the end.<sup>30</sup> Legarth’s thematic organization yields interesting insights into individual passages but does not respect the occasional nature of Ignatius’s letters. In addition, it obscures insights that can be drawn from consideration of the epistolary structure of each document, since the letters can stand as separate compositions. To study cultic metaphors in Ignatius’s letters while taking seriously the metaphors’ placement in particular letters may alter the more uniform presentation in Legarth’s analysis.

Other questions may be raised about Legarth’s study. First, although the similarities in temples, altars, priests, and sacrificial language seem prima facie capable of being classified together, when reading through Ignatius’s letters and Guds tempel, the suspicion arises that Ignatius’s discussions of the altar on which he is sacrificed (Rom. 2.2), the one altar that grounds Philadelphian eucharistic practice (Phld. 4), and the temple that the Ephesians comprise as unified stones (Eph. 9.1) are employed for a variety of reasons. Although chapter 8 will include a larger attempt to demonstrate the variety of Ignatius’s cultic language,<sup>31</sup> the majority of this study will focus on the temple and priestly metaphors in order to show the different ways in which Ignatius employs them. Second, Legarth refers to temple symbolism as a catalyzing and reductive force in Ignatius’s Christology, since Jesus is both God and obedient to the Father in the temple. The catalyzation comes because Jesus is included as God in the temple (Eph. 15.3). However, Legarth also sees Jesus as a reductive force, since Jesus can only be included as the person of worship in the temple if he is referred to as θεός and not, for example, if he is referred to as κύριος or Ἰησοῦς Χριστός. Yet such an attribution implies that the metaphor played a causative role in Ignatius’s depiction of Jesus as both the God who should be worshipped and the model of obedience. There may be other forces at work in Ignatius’s Christology, and if Jesus is both divine and mediator outside of the temple metaphors, this would bring into question Legarth’s ascription to the temple of a simultaneously catalytic and reductive role. It may be that the temple metaphors reflect Ignatius’s beliefs about Jesus rather than actively form them.

However, the point that most requires clarification is Legarth’s claim that there is a tension-filled relationship between temple symbolism and Christology. The location of Legarth’s singular “tension” is ambiguous. Two tensions may be in place. First, it is possible that there is a tension regarding the identity of the God who is deserving of worship in the temple. Sometimes the Father is the central figure (Eph. 9.1), at other times it is Jesus (Eph. 15.3), and at still other points there is possible ambiguity (Magn. 7.2; Phld. 7.2). Thus the tension could turn on the question of who is deserving of worship. Second, there may be a tension in the role that Jesus plays in the temple metaphors. Jesus is depicted as a mediator and high priest in some texts (Eph. 9.1; Phld. 9.1), but he is the God who is to be worshipped in the temple elsewhere (Eph. 15.3). Perhaps, then, one could identify “spændingsfyldte forhold” (tension-filled relationships) in Legarth’s understanding of Ignatius’s temple metaphors rather than “et spændingsfyldte forhold” (a tension-filled relationship).<sup>32</sup> Further, Legarth maintains that Ignatius’s Christology has not been fully integrated into the temple metaphor of Phld. 7.2 because it is the Father to whom the temple belongs and no theocentric thoughts about Jesus are to be found in the passage.<sup>33</sup> The lack of integration between Ignatius’s attributions of θεός to Jesus and the Father’s role as the God who is worshipped in the temple seems to be a corollary of Legarth’s tension-filled relationship, but it is not entirely clear how this observation relates to the relationship.

Since Legarth demonstrates his understanding through a close reading and interpretation, the tension that he perceives will be addressed fully in the exegetical chapters as the study progresses. However, two things may be noted in preparation. First, if the so-called tension between Jesus as mediator and Jesus as God can be found elsewhere in the letters, this would suggest that the tension, if there is one, exists further afield than in Ignatius’s cultic language alone. In this case, the temple would provide an example of tension in Ignatian Christology but would be unlikely to serve as the cause of the tension. Second, Legarth’s christological tension assumes that a mediatorial figure is less than God. However, if only God can reveal Godself, as Ignatius occasionally seems to hint (e.g. Eph. 19.2; Magn. 8.2), then God must serve as the revealer or mediator to humans in addition to receiving human worship. If the assumption that mediation implies tension with worship can be challenged in Ignatius’s letters, it may be possible to resolve the christological tension that Legarth finds.

1.2.2.2. René Kieffer

Although Legarth’s treatment is the only monograph on Ignatius and the temple, René Kieffer has contributed an insightful chapter on the topic. Originally presented at a 1998 symposium in Tübingen, Kieffer’s contribution takes up

<sup>32</sup> See Legarth, Guds tempel, 217; idem, “Tempelsymbolik,” 53. “Et spændingsfyldte forhold” is brought to the fore with reference to Eph. 15.3.

Ignatius's cultic imagery alongside other studies of the heavenly city and heavenly Jerusalem.<sup>34</sup> Kieffer makes the case that the metaphor of the heavenly city should be linked to the Ignatian temple metaphors because God is portrayed as dwelling in the church. While Kieffer acknowledges that he is informed by Legarth's thesis, his interest is iconographic. "Nous espérons ainsi pouvoir cerner de près l'iconographie qui détermine la symbolique du temple et de l'autel chez Ignace."<sup>35</sup>

Kieffer works through much of the same material as Legarth and is again an insightful reader. He likewise views the temple and altar as referring to similar entities, but he collects the references in Ephesians and Philadelphians into discrete sections.<sup>36</sup> This allows for more attention to be given to intra-epistolary connections. Despite this different focus from Legarth's more topical study, little attention is given to the role of cultic imagery in the argumentative contexts in which they occur. For example, given the placement of the temple in Phld. 7.2 between Ignatius's comments about Judaism in Phld. 6.1 and the archives in Phld. 8.2, one might ask how the temple metaphor aids Ignatius's argument in this context.<sup>37</sup> This limited attention to Ignatius's rhetoric becomes more evident as he turns to metaphors that occur outside of Ephesians and Philadelphians. These are treated more briefly and with hardly any attention to how the imagery may be connected to the original letter. Thus, although Kieffer is right to read passages from the same letter alongside one another and that Ignatius's imagery is often employed for polemical purposes, it remains to show how cultic metaphors contribute to Ignatius's argument as well as to illustrate the way in which the imagery aids Ignatius's polemic.

Finally, Kieffer comments on Legarth's christological tension with regard to Eph. 15.3. More will be said about this in chapter 6, but Kieffer rightly points out that Legarth "par suite de la présence du mot θεός, ramène trop facilement l'aspect christologique de notre texte au théocentrisme du temple chez Ignace."<sup>38</sup> Since Ignatius refers to Jesus as θεός outside of the temple, Kieffer is correct that it is difficult to justify Legarth's theocentric and Christocentric distinction in the temple. Theology and Christology run together for Ignatius. Yet Kieffer is in danger of making a similar mistake when he writes, "Dans les textes vraiment théocentriques comme 9,1ss, le temple est marqué par le Père et non par le Christ."<sup>39</sup> Yet this statement ignores Ignatius's emphatic statement
