Preface

This book originated from my doctoral dissertation, defended at Andrews University (Michigan, USA) in May 2023, and stemmed from a convergence of several personal interests. Initially, my dissertation proposal aimed to analyze how Zechariah's and Daniel's reinterpretations of older prophecies impact their genre. I suspected that the communicative strategies usually associated with the apocalyptic discourse might prove more flexible and adaptable than commonly acknowledged. However, as cautioned by my dissertation committee, this proved to be an immense undertaking. After significant refinement, it culminated in the creation of this book.

I am grateful to several individuals and institutions who have played pivotal roles in developing the ideas expressed in this work. Mohr Siebeck and their team deserve special thanks for accepting my book for publication and guiding me through its production process. I am also deeply appreciative of the mentors, friends, and professors who made this project possible. Particularly, I thank Luiz, Silvana, Elisete, Luzia, Mark, Diane, and Rute for their unwavering support over the years.

I am profoundly grateful for all the guidance my professor, advisor, and mentor, Dr. Roy Gane, has offered me. You have always been generous, fair, pastoral, and exigent with me, combining high academic standards and considerate encouragement. Thank you for being more than an advisor but a true inspiration throughout my doctoral training. In addition to Dr. Gane, I thank my professors Dr. Jacques Doukhan, Dr. Richard Davidson, Dr. Oliver Glanz, Dr. Constance Gane, Dr. Jiří Moskala, Dr. John Matthews and Dr. Reinaldo Siqueira for inspiring me in my journey with the Hebrew Bible. I also thank Dr. John Goldingay who, as the external examiner of my dissertation, has offered me invaluable insights. I sincerely thank my friend and brother Kenneth Bergland for suggesting ideas, helping me through their development and thus fostering the inception of what now is seen in this book.

Several institutions provided essential support for completing this work, including the Brazilian Southern Union Conference (USB), the Adventist College of Paraná (FAP), and the Seventh-day Adventist Seminary at Andrews University. I am grateful for their sponsorship and institutional encouragement.

Camila, Miguel, and Helena, your presence has been my greatest victory. We are stronger, more united, and closer together after everything we lived during the years leading to the completion of this book. Miguel, you gave me strength with your clever way of seeing the world, intensity, and joy in life.

Helena, you have lightened our burdens with your smile, creativity, humor, and acuteness. Camila, you saw it all, lived it all, and felt it all. Of all the human beings to whom I dedicate this book, you are the main one.

As the people here acknowledged are so remembered for their participation on this journey, my hope is that this book serves as an open pathway for those who engage with it. May their eschatological horizons never cease to expand towards the wisdom its object of research describes. Whether through compelling arguments or steadfast faith, rigorous analysis or heartfelt search, may they become wise. As they so are made, may they acquire a better understanding of the One to whom this work is ultimately dedicated.

Chapter 1

Background to the Study

A. Introduction

On March 4, 1865, large delegations converged on the American capital for the second inauguration of President Abraham Lincoln. The event was received as a meaningful and glad moment in the nation's history. However, "just beneath the outward merry-making lay a different emotion. A weariness of spirit pervaded the nation."<sup>1</sup> War's grim effects had heavily touched American families. "An estimated 623,000 men died in the Civil War."<sup>2</sup> The conflict's psychological, economic, and spiritual impacts affected the people's perspectives about the future, prompting a solemn but hopeful expectation that Lincoln's second inaugural speech would address their concerns.

The speech turned out to be admirably short, but marked by a profound theological elaboration on divine providence and sovereignty over human history. After briefly describing how the war between the Union and rebel sides came about, Lincoln observed:

Neither party expected for the war the magnitude or the duration which it has already attained. Neither anticipated that the cause of the conflict might cease with or even before the conflict itself should cease. Each looked for an easier triumph and a result less fundamental and astounding. Both read the same Bible and pray to the same God, and each invokes His aid against the other. It may seem strange that any men should dare to ask a just God's assistance in wringing their bread from the sweat of other men's faces, but let us judge not, that we be not judged. The prayers of both could not be answered. That of neither has been answered fully. The Almighty has His own purposes. "Woe unto the world because of offenses; for it must needs be that offenses come, but woe to that man by whom the offense cometh." If we shall suppose that American slavery is one of those offenses which, in the providence of God, must needs come, but which, having continued through His appointed time, He now wills to remove, and that He gives to both North and South this terrible war as the woe due to those by whom the offense came, shall we discern therein any departure from those divine attributes which the believers in a living God always ascribe to Him? Fondly do we hope, fervently do we pray, that this mighty scourge of war may speedily pass away. Yet, if God wills that it continue until all the wealth piled by the bondsman's two hundred and fifty years of unrequited toil shall be sunk, and until every drop of blood drawn with the lash shall be paid by another drawn with the sword, as was said three thousand years ago, so still it must be said “the judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether.”<sup>3</sup>

The American president displayed a particular theological view about God’s interaction with human reality. He regarded American slavery as an offense against God that, according to divine providence, had to occur. However, the offense brought the divine woe of war against those who caused it.

The speech employed a particular time-space literary architecture (i.e., the way it organized notions of time and space for construing the framework of his message). Thus, Lincoln asserted that slavery’s existence ran through God’s “appointed time.” That divinely marked period allowed not only slavery’s presence in American society but also certainty about the time for its removal.<sup>4</sup> Moreover, he used geographical referents for the nation’s psychologically and politically divided territory, describing the divine woe of war touching “North and South.” Lincoln’s ideas about divine providence, sovereignty over the northern and southern American territories, and God’s appointed time functioned as a powerful background for his emphasis on the need for prayer to end the strife. He united himself with the people in fervent prayer and work to remove their offense against heaven amid a catastrophic reality. Nevertheless, if God wanted the conflict to continue, he believed further destruction through war would be a righteous act of divine judgment.

Lincoln crafted the expression of his perspective through a carefully connected web of reused biblical passages “to give meaning to the sacrifices of the war by placing them in a biblical context.”<sup>5</sup> These passages gave force to his speech, intensifying the conceptualization of a world functioning under divine providence.

<sup>4</sup> Abraham Lincoln’s struggle to comprehend the intersection between divine providence and the American Civil War can already be seen in a private note he wrote in September of 1862: “The will of God prevails. In great contests each party claims to act in accordance with the will of God. Both may be, and one must be wrong. God cannot be for and against the same thing at the same time. In the present civil war, it is quite possible that God’s purpose is something different from the purposes of either party – and yet the human instrumentalities, working just as they do are the best adaptation to effect His purposes. I am almost ready to say that this is probably true – that God wills this contest, and wills that it shall not end yet. By his mere quiet power on the minds of the now contestants, he could have either saved or destroyed the Union without a human contest. Yet the contest began. And, having begun, he could give the final victory to either side any day. Yet the contest proceeds” (Abraham Lincoln, “Meditation on the Divine Will,” in Collected Works of Abraham Lincoln, 9 vols., ed. Roy P. Basler [New Brunswick: Rutgers University Press, 1953], 5:403–4).

The first notable reuse of a biblical passage in this speech is an allusion to Gen 3:19. Genesis describes God's punishment of the first human being with toil in cultivating food due to his sinful decision that affected all humankind. Lincoln used this passage to question the insurgents' prayers for God's favor. By indicating that no man should gain his subsistence from another man's sweat,<sup>6</sup> he was tacitly affirming enslaved people's right to freedom while defending the concept that no party had the privilege of limiting God's universal curse to a single class of humans and profiting from it. Through this literary strategy, he emphasized that the divine curse did not fall solely upon enslaved people, but upon all humankind. All men and women are equal before God, even under divine punishment and condemnation.

The speech also evokes Matt 7:1: "Judge not, that you be not judged." The passage refers to the human tendency toward polarization and hypocrisy. Jesus urged those whose moral sensibilities led them to notice others' mistakes to correct their own problems before accusing their brethren. Using Christ's words in this passage, Lincoln stressed that both parties were under divine judgment and that the abolitionist side should not rush to judge. For him, even those who fought on the Union side should carefully weigh their paths as the war unfolded, for the divine purpose could be different from that of either human side: "The prayers of both could not be answered. That of neither has been answered fully."<sup>7</sup> Thus, Lincoln combined Matt 7:1 with Gen 3:19 to intensify his call for a process of collective non-judgmental analysis while delivering enslaved people from their misery.

The American president defended the idea that God appointed times for allowing evil and bringing good: "If we shall suppose that American slavery is one of those offenses which, in the providence of God, must needs come, but which, having continued through His appointed time, He now wills to remove [...]"<sup>8</sup> He supported that perspective by quoting Matt 18:7: "Woe unto the world because of offenses; for it must needs be that offenses come, but woe to that man by whom the offense cometh." In this passage, Jesus warned his audience against bringing stumbling blocks into the world, especially for children, the most vulnerable stratum of society. Jesus backed up his warning with a time-space architecture intimately linking heaven and earth: "For I tell you that in heaven their angels are always in the presence of my heavenly Father" (Matt 18:10). It appears that Lincoln's reuse of Matt 18:7 helped him to balance his perspective on divine sovereignty with the need for human prayer and action toward ending the war. For him, the fact that divine providence was in charge did not erase human free will.

A last biblical passage quoted in the president's second inaugural speech is Ps 19:9: "The judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether." In its original context, this biblical passage describes God's sovereign reliability. Psalm 19 celebrates the Lord's control over the sky and the sun (Ps 19:1–6) and his providential interaction with human endeavors through his law, statutes, and precepts (Ps 19:7–9). The psalm closes with a petition for God to keep one from willful sins (Ps 19:13) and to accept this prayer as pleasing (Ps 19:14). Given Lincoln's stress on divine sovereignty, his reuse of Ps 19:9 fits into the speech's theology of God's providential will and interaction with humans, particularly during the American Civil War. Although the nation fervently prayed for the end of the conflict, God's righteous judgments ultimately would be fulfilled through either peace or war.

Lincoln's second inaugural speech illustrates how analyses of reuse and literary time-space architecture are valuable and significant for understanding a speech's full force. Every author makes particular artistic choices to express time and space structures within which his / her composition will unfold. These choices comprise the inner world of a piece of literature, shaping the articulation and development of ideas. Mikhail Bakhtin pioneered the identification of a work's generic time-space architecture, which he termed "chronotope." He emphasized the tendency of literary works to operate in tension between conservatism and innovation of previous generic representations while rendering their chronotopes.<sup>9</sup> Accordingly, his theory allowed for the development of an approach to genre differentiation that takes the phenomenon of literary adaptation into account, as one of the choices an author can make in building a composition is to reuse previous texts to intensify and expand a given concept.

A similar phenomenon occurs in exilic and post-exilic prophecies in the Hebrew Bible (HB). Scholars have suggested the existence of a dominant interest in earlier prophecies during the exilic and post-exilic periods, with such prophecies reused for the composition of other prophetic narratives / visions. A clear example of the phenomenon occurs in Dan 9. Daniel's prayer in Dan 9:3–19 reuses language from Solomon's prayer at the dedication of the temple (1 Kgs 8:22–54) and Deuteronomy's covenantal curses (Deut 30). In addition, Dan 9:1–3 connects Daniel's supplications with his reading of Jeremian prophecies about the end of the Babylonian exile, as he understood from those prophecies that the exile would last seventy years (Jer 25:11–12; 29:10). Bringing these textual strands together, the author of Dan 9 interpreted the seventy years as conditionally related to the need for a covenantal spiritual revival. Accordingly, Daniel's very impulse to pray is reminiscent of Jer 29, for the Jeremian prophecy urged the people to pray for deliverance at the end of the promised period (29:12–13). The connection intensifies the evoking text's depiction of its praying hero, who, as a sage of past divine predictions, understands prophecy and the time in which he lives.

The literary intensification effect of textual reuse also has an eschatological dimension. In Dan 9:24–27, the connection between Jeremiah’s classical prophecy and Gabriel’s apocalyptic discourse becomes the basis for the evoking text’s eschatological referentiality. Daniel’s reference to the prophetic seventy years intensifies the text’s space-time architecture: Jeremiah’s classical prophecy becomes a pattern for a more extended period (the seventy weeks of years [Dan 9:24]), a higher sacrifice (Dan 9:26), and an enduring covenant (Dan 9:27). Therefore, the reuse charges the evoking text’s discourse with the sense that God’s liberation of Judah from Babylon set the pattern for a greater future deliverance, in a period far removed from Daniel’s vantage point.

Among the apocalyptic texts of the HB, Dan 10–12 is one of those that most frequently reuse past prophecies. It continues Dan 9’s dynamic, portraying how God will lead humankind to the end of the present age and effect a greater liberation of Daniel’s people at that time than in the past. Texts such as Isa 7–12, 26, 28, 53, 66; Jer 30; Ezek 1–3, 8–11; and Hab 2 are reused in Dan 10–12’s depiction of a great war that leads to a final divine intervention in human history (Dan 12:1–3). These reuses appear to function as structures of meaning intensification, on which the prophetic expectations elicited by Dan 10–12 build with a more intense and developed eschatological focus on time-space dynamics leading to the time of the end. As a result, the question arises: What is the significance of the reuse of previous prophecies for understanding representations of time and space in Dan 10–12?

This chapter lays out the scholarly background for the present study, formulates the research problem, and states the purpose of and justification for this research. A final section provides an overview of this study’s chapters.

B. Background to the Study

The present section covers observations drawn from three distinct areas / subjects of biblical scholarship: (1) the relationship between classical and apocalyptic<sup>10</sup> prophecy, (2) post-exilic dominant interest in older prophecies, and (3)

<sup>10</sup> Since Koch’s nuanced treatment of the concept of “apocalypse,” it has been the assumption in academia that it represents both a literary genre and an intellectual / social movement (Klaus Koch, The Rediscovery of Apocalyptic: A Polemical Work on a Neglected Area of Biblical Studies and Its Damaging Effects on Theology and Philosophy, SBT 22 [Naperville, IL: Alec R. Allenson, 1970], 18–35). As John J. Collins observed, “More recent scholarship has abandoned the use of “apocalyptic” as a noun and distinguishes between apocalypse as a literary genre, apocalypticism as a social ideology, and apocalyptic eschatology as a set of ideas and motifs that may also be found in other literary genres and social

the definitions and natures of the post-exilic biblical prophecy and apocalyptic genres.<sup>11</sup>

Contemporary discussion concerning Jewish apocalypses is rooted in a renewal of interest in the topic during the second part of the twentieth century, when “two foci of scholarly attention” were proposed: “definition and derivation.”<sup>12</sup> That is, what is the precise nature of Jewish apocalyptic literature, and

Louis Martyn*, ed. J. Marcus and M. L. Soards, 2nd ed., BSGN (London: Bloomsbury, 2015), 17–48. In addition to the differentiation pointed out by Collins, the following terms are here adopted: canonical apocalypticism, referring to Daniel and Revelation; proto-apocalypticism, referring to a tendency of canonical writers toward classical prophetic activity in line with that of Daniel; and Jewish apocalypticism or apocalyptics, referring to Second Temple Jewish extra-canonical compositions.

<sup>11</sup> Several reviews of literature on Jewish apocalypticism and the above-mentioned related topics have been published. Here, I focus on information important to the present study’s research question. <sup>12</sup> Oswalt, “Recent Studies,” 371. The renewal was first promoted by a few German scholars who, during the mid-twentieth century, critiqued the Wellhausenian view of Jewish apocalypticism as “a denial of true Old Testament faith” (Oswalt, “Recent Studies,” 369–70; cf. Julius Wellhausen, Skizzen und Vorarbeiten [Berlin: Reimer, 1899], 225–34; Friedrich Lücke, A Commentary on the Epistles of St. John, trans. what are its historical and literary antecedents / roots? The conventional scholarly approach has been to place the biblical books of Daniel and Revelation within the category of apocalyptic literature along with those written during the Second Temple period, such as 1–3 Enoch, 2–3 Baruch, Jubilees, 4 Ezra, the Apocalypse of Abraham, and the Sibylline Oracles.<sup>13</sup> This approach initially facilitated attempts to provide definitive lists of features found in apocalyptic literature,<sup>14</sup> but some scholars claimed it tended toward oversimplification of the phenomena.<sup>15</sup> The debate impelled scholarship toward a search for a definition that accounted for the complexity of the genre, leaving space for a further nuancing of the genre's historical and literary features.

Following a revival promoted by scholars such as Klaus Koch, Paul Hanson, and Michael Stone,<sup>16</sup> the publication of Semeia 14 in 1979 represented the efforts of the “Society of Biblical Literature Forms and Genres Project” toward [1969]: 51). The main ideas comprising the “rediscovery” were first promoted by Ernst Käsemann, who saw OT apocalypticism as “the mother of all Christian Theology – since we cannot really class the preaching of Jesus as theology” (Ernst Käsemann, “The Beginnings of Christian Theology,” JTC 6 [1969]: 69; cf. Adolf Hilgenfeld, Die jüdische Apokalypik in ihrer geschichtlichen Entwicklung: Ein Beitrag zur Vorgeschichte des Christentums, nebst einem Anhang über das gnostische System des Basilides [Leiden: Brill, 1966], viii–2), a position that broke with Rudolf Bultmann's stress on the independence of the NT's historical eschatology from the OT's mythic apocalyptic movements (Rudolf Bultmann, Jesus Christ and Mythology [New York: Scribner, 1958], 18–26). Opposing Bultmann, Käsemann stated that apocalypticism was the actual link between the theologies of both testaments. Wolfhart Pannenberg made another crucial contribution to the beginning of modern interest in the topic: he saw the apocalyptic view of history as essential to comprehend the historical horizon for the inception of Christian theology (Wolfhart Pannenberg, “Redemptive Event and History,” in Basic Questions in Theology: Collected Essays, trans. G. H. Kehm, 2 vols. [Philadelphia: Fortress; London: SCM, 1970–71]: 1:15–80). See also a useful depiction of the debate in Koch, Rediscovery, 13–17. Koch presents Käsemann and Pannenberg as responsible for engendering “in certain of the younger German theologians [...] a positive Apocalyptic renaissance” (Koch, Rediscovery, 15).

a definition and outline of the literary genre “apocalypse.” John J. Collins observed that the project was based upon a classificatory etic approach, defining genre as “a group of texts marked by distinctive recurring characteristics which constitute a recognizable and coherent type of writing.”<sup>17</sup> The group’s form-critical classificatory approach led to the elaboration of a master-paradigm aiming to distinguish the defining characteristics of the genre, embracing both the form and the content of the analyzed books. The paradigm was divided into two main sections: the framework of the revelation – including its manner and the concluding elements – and its content – organizing the prevalent eschatological events in time and the otherworldly places and beings in space. Using the master-paradigm, the following definition of apocalypse was achieved:

A genre of revelatory literature with a narrative framework, in which a revelation is mediated by an otherworldly being to a human recipient, disclosing a transcendent reality which is both temporal, insofar as it envisages Eschatological salvation, and spatial insofar as it involves another, supernatural world.<sup>18</sup>

The publication of Semeia 14 was one of several scholarly advancements of the last quarter of the twentieth century. Collins observes that 1979 was also the year of the Uppsala (see nn. 14–15) and Louvain conferences (J. Lambrecht, ed., L’Apocalypse johannique et l’apocalyptique dans le Nouveau Testament, BETL 53 [Gembloux: Leuven, 1980]), as well as major studies like Jean Carmignac, “Qu’est-ce que l’apocalyptique? <sup>18</sup> Collins, “Introduction,” 9. See also Collins, The Apocalyptic Imagination: An Introduction to Jewish Apocalyptic Literature, 3rd ed. (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2016), 5. Collins himself suggested a division between historical and cosmological Jewish apocalypses: “It would seem that there are two strands of tradition in the Jewish apocalypses, one of which is characterized by visions, with an interest in the development of history, while the other is marked by otherworldly journeys with a stronger interest in cosmological speculation” (Collins, The Apocalyptic Imagination, 3rd ed., 5). Cf. Carmignac’s definition of the genre: “genre littéraire qui présente, à travers des symboles typiques, des revelations soit sur Dieu, Despite criticism,<sup>19</sup> the definition has been widely influential.

Four years after the publication of Semeia 14, another influential work came into print. The Uppsala volume is comprised of papers presented at an international colloquium on apocalypticism held at Uppsala University (Sweden) on August 12–17, 1979. The group represented by the volume voted for a “contra definitionem, pro descriptione”<sup>20</sup> perspective, respecting the representation of generic features of each individual apocalyptic book / tradition instead of agreeing on a wider definition for the genre. Such a decision was a natural outcome of the widely different opinions expressed in the twenty-five papers presented. Within this perspective, Lars Hartman’s opening chapter of the book’s section on the literary genre of apocalypses (Literaturgattung), for example, demonstrated the need for deliberate work on how the sociolinguistic function, literary structure, themes, motifs, and illocutionary structure of the apocalyptic genre interconnect in each ancient apocalyptic work. “In this way our work may bring us into deeper understanding of what the authors of apocalypses wanted to say to which kind of readers in what kind of situation. But in the long run it may also turn out to be even more interesting, as we may recognize that their problems are reminiscent of ours.”<sup>21</sup> soit sur les anges ou les demons, soit sur leur partisans, soit sur les instruments de leur action” (Carmignac, “Qu’est-ce que l’apocalyptique?,” 20).

<sup>19</sup> Hellholm, for example, has noted that the definition does not indicate the function of the genre, therefore leaving it disconnected from its alleged Hellenistic setting (David Hellholm, “The Problem of Apocalyptic Genre and the Apocalypse of John,” Semeia 36 [1986]: 27). Lester L. Grabbe has reacted to this critique, arguing against the categorization of these books’ setting as being that of groups in political and spiritual crisis, but rather defining their identity as that of visionary communities / groups “analogous to modern millenary groups” (Oswalt, “Recent Studies,” 373; cf. Lester L. Grabbe, “The Social Setting of Early Jewish Apocalypticism,” JSP 4 [1989]: 27–47). However, despite the historical context, Oswalt interestingly observes that this definition shows a striking similarity to what would be expected for a definition of Israelite prophecy in general, except for the mediation of an otherworldly being, which therefore stresses a possible overall continuity between apocalypticism and prophetic tradition (Oswalt, “Recent Studies,” 373). Cf. additional criticism in E. P. Sanders, “The Genre of Palestinian Jewish Apocalypses,” in Hellholm, Apocalypticism in the Mediterranean World, 447–59; Stone, “Lists of Revealed Things,” 131–56; Jean Carmignac, “Description du phénomène de l’Apocalyptique dans l’Ancien Testament,” in Hellholm, Apocalypticism in the Mediterranean World, 163–70; Hartmut Gese, “Anfang und Ende der Apokalyptik, dargestellt am Sacharjabuch,” ZThK 70 (1973): 20–49; Michael A. Knibb, “Prophecy and the Emergence of the Jewish Apocalypses,” in Israel’s Prophetic Tradition: Essays in Honour of Peter R. Ackroyd, ed. In regard to the issue of derivation, scholars have elaborated on three source possibilities, taken separately or combined.<sup>22</sup> The first is the possibility that Jewish apocalypticism originated from a borrowing movement during the Second Temple period, carrying either signs of a strong Iranian / Persian influence<sup>23</sup> or possible syncretism between Hellenistic and oriental elements.<sup>24</sup> The content of specific apocalyptic compositions (E. P. Sanders, "The Genre of Palestinian Jewish Apocalypses," in Hellholm, Apocalypticism in the Mediterranean World, 447–59). The difficulty of relying solely on formally oriented definitions was already seen in Carmignac's resort to ancient cultural perspectives to differentiate prophecy from Jewish apocalypticism (Carmignac, "Qu'est-ce que l'apocalyptique?," 21).

<sup>22</sup> From 1960 to 1980 the general tendency was to link apocalypticism to Israelite prophecy (see, e.g., Jürgen Moltmann, Theology of Hope, trans. J. W. Leitch [New York: Harper & Row, 1967], 124–26; Koch, Rediscovery; Leon Morris, Apocalyptic [Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1972]). However, in the 1970s, important studies appeared suggesting that while prophetic and apocalyptic traditions indeed have strong connections, their differences must be considered as evidencing some of the major marks of biblical apocalypticism. These studies initiated a movement toward exploration of foreign elements and the usage of other literary genres for a better understanding of the origins of Jewish apocalypticism (see Koch, Rediscovery; Morris, Apocalyptic; Walter Schmithals, The Apocalyptic Movement: Introduction and Interpretation, trans. J. E. Steely [Nashville: Abingdon, 1975]).

<sup>23</sup> The first parallel between Daniel and the Persian apocalypse Bahman Yasht was drawn by F. Delitzsch in 1855 (F. Delitzsch, "Daniel," in Real-Encyklopädie für Protestantische Theologie und Kirche, ed. J. J. Herzog, 24 vols. [Hamburg: Rudolf Beffer, 1854–1868], 3:271–87). This parallel still remains an influential possibility for scholars. See, e.g., Harold H. Rowley, The Relevance of Apocalyptic (London: Lutterworth, 1944); David S. Russell, The Method and Message of Jewish Apocalyptic, OTL (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1964); David Winston, "The Iranian Component in the Bible, Apocrypha, and Qumran: A Review of the Evidence," HR 5 (1966): 183–216; William R.
