

ANDREA VESTRUCCI

Theology as Freedom

Dogmatik in der Moderne

Mohr Siebeck

Dogmatik in der Moderne

Edited by

Christian Danz, Jörg Dierken, Hans-Peter Großhans, and Friederike Nüssel

24

Andrea Vestrucci

Theology as Freedom

On Martin Luther's "De servo arbitrio"

Mohr Siebeck

Andrea Vestrucchi, born 1981; PhD, University of Lille SHS, France, and University of Milan, Italy; ThD, University of Geneva, Switzerland; formerly Professor of Ethics and Logic at the Federal University of Fortaleza, Brazil, and Australia Award Fellow of Monash University, Australia; as Laureate of the Academic Society of Geneva, he currently carries out his research at the University of California Berkeley, and he is Visiting Professor of Systematic Theology at the Graduate Theological Union, Berkeley, USA.
orcid.org/0000-0002-6336-1036

ISBN 978-3-16-156975-3 / eISBN 978-3-16-156976-0

DOI 10.1628/978-3-16-156976-0

ISSN 1869-39621 / eISSN 2569-3913 (Dogmatik in der Moderne)

The Deutsche Nationalbibliothek lists this publication in the Deutsche Nationalbibliographie; detailed bibliographic data are available at <http://dnb.dnb.de>.

© 2019 Mohr Siebeck Tübingen, Germany. www.mohrsiebeck.com

This book may not be reproduced, in whole or in part, in any form (beyond that permitted by copyright law) without the publisher's written permission. This applies particularly to reproductions, translations and storage and processing in electronic systems.

The book was printed on non-aging paper by Laupp & Göbel in Gomariningen and bound by Buchbinderei Nädele in Nehren.

Printed in Germany.

Preface

The topic of this book has deep roots in my life. I am not sure whether time is an indicator of the right to speak about a topic,¹ but certainly it is the evidence of an abiding and consummate passion.

This passion began when, as high school student, I first came into contact with the querelle between Erasmus and Luther, and with the problem of relating human freedom to divine freedom. Many years later, this interest flourished in my second doctoral dissertation in systematic theology, defended last year at the University of Geneva. Finally, this same passion has come to full fruition in this book, a complete rewriting of that dissertation.

My positions and ideas benefited considerably from criticism and advice from Hans-Christoph Askani, both during and after the dissertation. I matured in ways I could only hope for, thanks to the attentive freedom he granted me. My scientific debt to him is incalculable.

It is a true pleasure for me to express my profound gratitude to the Academic Society of Geneva, and in particular to its President, Patrizia Lombardo.

I am also particularly grateful to Günter Bader, Patrice Canivez and Ghislain Waterlot for their essential observations and comments during the defense.

This book benefited from numerous scientific exchanges and collaborations during the last five years. Forgetting too many, I would like to thank Andrew Benjamin, Davide Bigalli, Christophe Chalamet, Frédéric Chavel, Andreas Dettwiler, Michel Grandjean, Van Harvey, Ágnes Heller, Peter Murphy, Manfredo de Oliveira, Renato Pettoello, Anselm Ramelow, David Roberts, Mahendra Roopa, and Jonathan Sheehan. I am the only addressee for any criticism.

I would like to express my gratitude to Mohr Siebeck, and in particular to Katharina Gutekunst, for their patient and professional assistance.

Alessio Pirastu has helped and supported me far more than I deserve.

In memoriam Joana Borges Mesquita, Yves Clerget, and Angela Cortelezzi.

Palo Alto, California, August 2018

Andrea Vestrucci

¹ See Mann, "Joseph Novels": 9. Discussing his Joseph-Roman, Thomas Mann states that his interest in Egyptian mythology began in elementary school.

Table of Contents

Preface	V
Note on Citations.....	XII
Introduction.....	1
1. A First Look	1
2. Absurdity and Paradox.....	3
3. From a Conceptual to a Formal Approach.....	4
4. Three Languages of Freedom	6
5. Criticisms and Clarifications	10
6. How the Book is Organized.....	12
First Part: Freedom as Dependence on Divine Revelation.....	15
Chapter 1: A Void Name.....	16
1. Erasmus's satis probabilis sententia	16
2. Three sententiae Become One	20
3. The Theological Paradox of God's Freedom.....	24
4. Beyond Determinism	29
5. The Theological Paradox of Human Freedom.....	31
6. Looking at De libertate christiana	35
Chapter 2: Freedom of Paradox.....	38
1. Petitio principii	38
2. Claritas scripturae	41

3. Scandal and Folly	43
4. Sub contrario	46
5. Assequi	49
6. Freedom to Know Paradoxically.....	52
7. Nova lingua	54
8. Inopia formarum	58
9. Freedom to Say “ servum arbitrium ”	62
10. Luther’s “Copernican Revolution”.....	65
Chapter 3: A Theological Polyphony	68
1. Subjectivism.....	68
2. Transcendentalism	72
3. Ontology	77
4. Dialectics.....	84
Chapter 4: Theology coram Deo abscondito	89
1. A First Look at De servo arbitrio	89
2. Barth	91
3. Ebeling	94
4. Jüngel.....	96
5. A Different Perspective.....	100
6. Deus absconditus as Meta-Concept	102
7. Revelation and Deus revelatus	107
8. An Attempt of Formalization	111
Second Part: Freedom as Bond with the Divine Promise	115
Chapter 5: Sollen, Sein, and Sin	116
1. “Ought” Implies “Can”	116
2. The Deontic and the Modal.....	119
3. Luther Negates the Implication.....	122
4. Divine Commandments	124
5. The Condition of Sin	128
6. The Theological Limitation of Deontic Language.....	131

Chapter 6: Promise as Forgiveness.....	135
1. The Theological Meaning of Forgiveness	135
2. Promise as Origin	138
3. Sin and Forgiveness.....	141
4. The Realization of the Promise	144
5. Law and Gospel.....	148
6. Freedom to Be Responsible for God.....	151
Chapter 7: The Complexity of Justification	155
1. Two Aspects of Justice.....	155
2. The Semantic Overabundance of Justification	156
3. The Overlapping of the Historical and Systematic Aspects	158
4. Justification in De servo arbitrio	161
5. Two Ways of Justification’s Unconditionality.....	164
6. The Process of Imputation	166
7. From absolutus to subiectus	169
8. Addressing the Historical Complexity	171
9. Addressing the Systematic Complexity.....	173
10. Beyond the “ articulus ” Complex.....	175
Chapter 8: Luther and Kant.....	179
1. The “Pro/Contra” Aporia	179
2. “Pro”: Radical Evil.....	180
3. “Pro”: Three Conceptual Pairs.....	185
4. “Contra”: the “Ought Implies Can” Once Again	189
5. Engaging the Aporia	192
6. On the Human Sinful Condition	193
7. On God’s Justice and Grace.....	195
8. On Revelation.....	199
9. Overcoming the Aporia.....	201
10. Kant is Not a Theologian.....	202
11. Theology and Philosophy Conceive the Sollen Differently	204
12. Neither Reduction Nor Subordination.....	205

Third Part: Freedom as Meaningful Life under Divine Election	209
Chapter 9: Like Clay in the Potter's Hands.....	210
1. Life and Form.....	210
2. Typological Language	212
3. Merit as Meaning.....	218
4. Necessitas immutabilitatis	221
5. The Meaning Precedes Life	224
6. Incipit vita nova	226
Chapter 10: The Path Towards Salvation.....	229
1. Formal Rebirth	229
2. Damnation as Salvation	232
3. Paradoxical Retributive Justice.....	236
4. Freedom to Say Salvation	239
5. Existentialist Terminology?	240
6. Conscientia	243
7. Theology and Existence.....	246
Chapter 11: The Function of Divine Predestination.....	250
1. Fidei summus gradus	250
2. Justifying God's Retributive Justice	253
3. Potentia sub-ordinata	256
4. Predestination in De servo arbitrio	258
5. The Elected Life	261
6. No System of Predestination.....	263
7. Children's Suffering and the Grand Inquisitor	267
8. Theology vs. Theodicy	270
Chapter 12: Life, a Celebration of Divine Grace	273
1. Gratia	273
2. Jacob and Esau as Archetypes.....	275
3. Literature, Myth, and Psychology.....	278

4. Comparison with Theology.....	282
5. Luther on Jacob and Esau	286
6. “Den falschen Verräter, das mörderische Blut”.....	290
7. Freedom to be an Object of Grace	294
8. Living Grace, Living Freedom.....	295
Conclusion.....	297
Bibliography.....	301
Index of References.....	319
Index of Names	321
Index of Subjects.....	325

Note on Citations

In this book, modern sources are always referenced by their abbreviated titles. The following cases might call for a more detailed explanation.

For the works by Martin Luther, I indicate only the volume of the Weimarer Ausgabe (WA) followed by the page and line numbers. If more than one work appears in the same volume, I differentiate each work with a letter after the number of the volume, according to the order of appearance of each work in the volume. For instance, Luther's erste Bearbeitung of the sieben Bußpsalmen is indicated as WA 1a, the Disputatio Heidelbergae habita is indicated as WA 1b, and the Resolutiones disputationum de indulgentiarum virtute is indicated as WA 1c. The bibliography at the end of the book displays each of Luther's referenced works along with its respective WA volume.

Desiderius Erasmus's De libero arbitrio διατριβή sive collatio is abbreviated as Diatribē.

Finally, I refer to the three Critiques by Immanuel Kant as KrV, KpV, and KU, respectively.

Introduction

Theology is freedom.

This bold statement results from analyzing one of the most important and controversial works of Christian theology: Martin Luther's De servo arbitrio. In this book, I argue that De servo arbitrio manifests, and evidences, the very freedom distinctive of theological discourse.

Of what does this freedom of theology or as theology consist? And how is this relationship between freedom and De servo arbitrio possible?

Let us begin again.

1. A First Look

Freedom is one of theology's subjects. Theology speaks about divine freedom, human freedom, and their interrelation. Theological anthropology, moral theology, soteriology, theodicy – all of these are examples of theological discourses dealing with the issue of freedom.

Theology might speak about freedom in ways that are unconventional or unexpected, or even in ways that are seemingly absurd. This is how Erasmus of Rotterdam, in his De libero arbitrio διατριβή sive collatio (1524), judges the position that Martin Luther defends in his Assertio (1520): Luther's negation of the theological relevance of *liberum arbitrium*¹ is absurd.

Luther's reply, De servo arbitrio (1525), does not retract this "absurd" position. Rather, Luther's work engages the legitimacy of Erasmus's charge of absurdity.

My reflection focuses on the fact that a judgment of absurdity is rejected. Rejecting a judgment of absurdity means stating that the principles or conditions of the distinction between absurdity and meaningfulness are inadequate. Where these conditions should see meaning, they see only absurdity. Thus, De servo arbitrio questions the validity of the conditions for the formulation of meaningful propositions about freedom. When they are applied to theology, these conditions are limited.

¹ In this book I leave this term in its Latin version. Translating it (for instance, as "free will," or "free choice"; see also infra, Ch. 1 note 11) would mean losing the immediate and intuitive semantic connection to its conceptual twin, the "servum arbitrium" (usually translated as "bondage of the will"). As I will clarify shortly, this connection between the two concepts is of fundamental importance.

As we will see, this questioning of the conditions' validity pertains only to theology. For this reason, theology itself is freedom. Theology challenges what is deemed to be unquestionable, being assumed as the ground or foundation of every possible questioning. In sum, theology is the freedom of language to reconsider language's logical forms.² De servo arbitrio applies this situation – this formal freedom – to propositions about freedom.

This is my point: De servo arbitrio does not merely present a concept of freedom opposed to the one defended by Erasmus. Rather, Luther's work operates upon the forms of meaningful conceptualizations of freedom³ – forms that Erasmus assumes (and defends) as axiomatically valid. De servo arbitrio is a very particular meta-discourse: usually, a meta-discourse presents the methodological foundations of a set of propositions (such as the set of propositions on freedom); instead of doing this, Luther's work presents the theological limitation of such foundations. In this way, De servo arbitrio helps to demarcate the specific place of theology among the other expressions of human intelligence.

² To understand my use of the term “form,” consider the following definition: “Materie ist das datum, was gegeben ist [...]. Die Form aber, wie diese data gesetzt sind, die Art, wie das Mannigfaltige in Verbindung steht” (Kant, Vorlesungen: Ak XXVIII 575). I assume this or that word (for instance, “liberum” and “arbitrium” or, in general, “freedom” and “x”) to be the “matter,” and the logical rules connecting words in a meaningful way (in our case, in the concept “liberum arbitrium”, or “freedom = x”) to be the “form.” Therefore, a form is the condition of the meaning of a concept. I will shortly outline three formal languages (or logics) of freedom the validity of which De servo arbitrio questions.

³ By “operating upon” the forms or logics of conceptualization I mean handling, reshaping, reworking, modifying these forms. De servo arbitrio reshapes (or modifies) the forms of conceptualization of freedom. This modification is intrinsic to the questioning of these forms' validity. To question the validity of a form means that the form is object of investigation. This investigation happens on a level that includes the form: this level is called “meta”; for instance, a language can be object of a metalanguage, or a logic can be object of a metalogical investigation. Given that the form is object of such “meta” investigation, this form is no longer the condition of both the investigation and the meaning resulting from this investigation. More precisely, the form under investigation is no longer the ultimate foundation of this meaning: it is object of (re)foundation. From this it follows that to question the validity of a form corresponds to change its logical status, thus, to modify this form – to operate upon it. As I will analyze in the book, this operation upon the forms assumes a peculiar shape in theology (at least in the theology of De servo arbitrio): it corresponds to the use of a form in a way that expresses this form's limitation; in particular see infra, Ch. 2 sections 6 and 9.

2. Absurdity and Paradox

My analysis begins with a trivial observation: De servo arbitrio responds to Erasmus's Diatribē. This means that De servo arbitrio does not merely repeat that liberum arbitrium does not exist: this was already done by Luther five years earlier, and it was already rejected by Erasmus as absurd. Therefore, Luther's work does not simply present a way of thinking about freedom that is opposed to the way that Erasmus defends (liberum arbitrium); rather, it must now respond to Erasmus's accusation of absurdity.

Luther's response cannot simply present a counter-criticism of absurdity against Erasmus, because thinking in terms of liberum arbitrium indeed makes sense. Were this not so, then no charge of absurdity could have been formulated against Luther's negation of liberum arbitrium.

Thus, the reply that De servo arbitrio presents to Erasmus's criticism is more refined. It argues that thinking in terms of liberum arbitrium makes sense except in case we aim to consider freedom theologically; it applies to all discourses except theological discourse.

This distinctiveness of theology concerns the fact that theology is the language that deals with divine revelation. As I will analyze, De servo arbitrio Luther warns against formulating a theological proposition on the basis of a condition assumed as axiomatically valid means subordinating divine revelation under this condition, thus lowering revelation to human discourse. It follows that a coherent theology questions the axiomatic validity of all conditions.

Thus, for Luther, Erasmus's position is not absurd, but theologically wrong, because it measures divine revelation with conditions of meaning assumed as unquestionably valid – such as the formal language (or logic) founding the meaning of liberum arbitrium.⁴

This validity questioning is different from invalidating a single condition and replacing it with another one, usually one considered more fitting or more effective than the previous one. Rather, the validity of every condition is at stake here. In other words, De servo arbitrio focuses not on which form of conceptualizing freedom shall be used, but on how this form must be used, how a form is assumed coherently with the theological presuppositions.

Given that this applies to all conditions, theological propositions on freedom are based on the same "old" conditions, but assumed in the theological way: as non-axiomatically valid. Consequently, these theological propositions are operations upon their own conditions. In sum, De servo arbitrio presents modifications of the conditions of meaningfulness from within these conditions.

⁴ De servo arbitrio can be considered an occasional polemic writing (see Schwarzwäller, Theologia crucis: 39–40; Kolb, Bound Choice: 16–17), as many other treatises by Luther (see Tranvik, "Works": 603). Yet the relevance (and complexity) of De servo arbitrio concerns its systematic contribution (see Herms, "Gewißheit": 50). As I will analyze, this contribution is the introduction of a disruptive quaestio juris in theology. In other words, De servo arbitrio attacks indeed Erasmus's position; however, what matters is to understand the scope of this attack. The theological fallacy that De servo arbitrio criticizes does not refer to the concepts (of freedom), but to the validity of these concepts' conditions.

This is evident from the title of Luther's work. The concept of servum arbitrium is built on the concept of liberum arbitrium. In servum arbitrium, the noun "arbitrium" is qualified by the opposite of the adjective "liberum." The result is an oxymoron, a sort of mockery of liberum arbitrium. Thus, servum arbitrium is not simply a concept of freedom opposed to the concept of liberum arbitrium, because the formulation of servum arbitrium is based on the conditions of formulation of liberum arbitrium.⁵ Thus, it is not that there are two different conditions for the two concepts; rather, the same condition is assumed in two opposing ways: as axiomatically valid (concept of liberum arbitrium) and as object of operation (concept of servum arbitrium).

This is a situation of self-reference: a condition of meaning is used to formulate its own theological limitation. Therefore, Luther "solves" the problem of how to deal theologically with the foundations of thinking by creating this very problem. Thinking theologically means questioning the foundations of this thinking; it means forcing the forms of this thinking to modify themselves. The outcome can only be a paradox – but, as I will clarify, a peculiar paradox, a paradox that is theological, and not simply logical.

This book analyzes the paradoxical modifications of the forms of conceptualizing freedom in De servo arbitrio. By doing so, it confirms that De servo arbitrio indeed posits more than the "absurdity" of the Assertio. Luther's work maps out what happens to the logics that found a non-absurd proposition (and the corresponding charge of absurdity) when they are subjected to the theological "center of gravity": divine revelation. De servo arbitrio expresses the freedom of these logics to question their own postulates.

3. From a Conceptual to a Formal Approach

It follows that the distinction between Erasmus's position and Luther's position is much more complex than simple opposition of two concepts of freedom.

The two theologians do not understand each other and their collision is left unresolved because their positions do not lie on the same level. Erasmus's position lies on the conceptual level and concerns the conceptualization of freedom, while Luther's position lies on the formal level and relates to the conditions of the conceptualization of freedom. Erasmus overlooks the quaestio juris; he does not address the method of conceptualizing freedom. Luther's reply, on the other hand, poses and tries to answer the quaestio juris. The object of Luther's discourse is the method upon which Erasmus's position is based.⁶ Consequently, it also includes the methodology of Luther's own previous position in his Assertio.

⁵ This is also proven empirically. Thinking about servum arbitrium invariably leads to thinking about liberum arbitrium. But not vice-versa: we can (and do) think about liberum arbitrium independently from any reference to servum arbitrium.

Thus, Luther's position lies on the meta level. This is why the concept of servum arbitrium implies the concept of liberum arbitrium, but not vice-versa: the concept of servum arbitrium is a meta-concept of freedom.

I would say that Luther's position includes both similarities to and departures from Cassirer's description of Goethe's scientific approach. In Cassirer's words, Goethe "hat das Problem in ein Postulat verwandelt."⁷ Luther operates in the opposite way: he turns the postulate into a problem. He dares to transform what is considered unquestionable into an issue to be investigated, and thus modified, transformed from within, and turned into a paradox. This is not for intellectual divertissement, but because the very grasp of the relationship between human and God depends foremost on that formal questioning.

The approach discussed herein is not only based on the passage from the conceptual to the meta-conceptual; more importantly, my approach states that precisely this passage is the main contribution of Luther's De servo arbitrio. De servo arbitrio does not articulate the negation of freedom; it articulates the negation of the theological legitimacy of prioritizing the logical conditions of thinking freedom over divine revelation. Nor does De servo arbitrio provide for the destruction of such forms. On the contrary, it establishes a specific approach to them: a theological one.

As such, De servo arbitrio does not present a method of doing theology: it presents theology as method. It affirms and expresses theology's task of reconsidering the validity of the formal languages that found and validate concepts and discourses (on freedom). De servo arbitrio is the expression of theology as freedom – freedom to effect such paradoxical inversion between postulate and problem.

Hence, this book is not concerned with a prescriptive discourse about how theology should think (about freedom). Rather, I am interested in the fact that there is a theological position (Luther's) which poses a problem for the conditions according to which freedom makes sense. In light of this fact, I ask why there is a problem, and how this problem relates to these conditions. In sum, my aim is to understand how a paradoxical operation upon the formal languages of freedom can be carried out. This aim can only be accomplished by analyzing the relationship between the respective outlooks of Erasmus and Luther towards the validity of the conditions of meaningfulness.

⁶ Luther never wrote a proper reply to Erasmus's further response, the two books of Hyperaspistes. The "official" reason was bad health conditions; see Kolb, Bound Choice: 14. I wonder whether another reason could also be the fact that Erasmus's Hyperaspistes I and II are founded upon the same methodology that Luther had already invalidated in De servo arbitrio; see infra, Ch. 1 section 2, in particular note 18. Luther did reply to Erasmus in a letter, which has not survived; see Kolb, Bound Choice: 14; see also Massing, Fatal Discord: 682–683. Rosin, Reformers: 97–102, claims that Luther's Annotationes in Ecclesiasten (WA 20) contain a reply to Erasmus. I add to that Luther's commentary on the Letter to the Galatians (WA 40.1); see infra, Ch. 2 section 3.

⁷ Cassirer, Freiheit: 326. Cassirer continues: "Für ihn gilt es in der Erkenntnis der Welt wie in der des eigenen Ich, daß wir sie durch Betrachtung niemals, wohl aber durch Handeln erlangen können."

Nor I am interested in establishing who is right between Luther and Erasmus. It is irrelevant to ask whether Luther is right or wrong, because the principles that Luther reshapes are methodological, therefore they are also principles of distinction between right and wrong. Therefore, the answer to the question "Who is right?" is simply a matter of arbitrary perspective on the principles. More precisely, asking that question would imply that it is possible for both Erasmus and Luther to satisfy the same criterion (one negatively and the other positively), but this is impossible in light of the gap between the levels of these two positions. Thus, I am interested in analyzing how these two levels are interconnected, and how the level "meta" is theologically relevant; how another way of dealing with the meaningful conceptualization of freedom is logically possible, and why this other way is theologically necessary.

The time has come to take up the same challenges engaged by Luther's De servo arbitrio: to access new regions of theological speculation and new understandings of the rapport between human and God by daring to challenge the validity of our logics of freedom.

4. Three Languages of Freedom

What are these formal conditions of meaningful propositions about freedom, the methodological principles that Erasmus takes for granted, and whose unquestionability Luther rejects?

Erasmus's argument postulates the validity of thinking in terms of liberum arbitrium. He reinforces this position with two argumenta ad absurdum: if this validity is negated, then the relevance of the norms and commandments is negated (first argument), along with the idea of human self-education (second argument). So, we have a threefold argument.

I demonstrate in this book that each part of Erasmus's argument is based on a specific formal language of freedom, a specific logic of conceptualizing freedom in a meaningful, non-absurd way. The method of Erasmus's argument is to assume one of these three logics positively, and the other two negatively (as principles of the two argumenta ad absurdum).

The logic of conceptualizing freedom that Erasmus positively assumes is the modal language of freedom. The other two logics are the deontic language of freedom and the typological language of freedom. It is upon each of them that De servo arbitrio operates. These formal languages are the protagonists of the three parts of this book, one for each part, respectively.

1. Modal Language of Freedom. According to this language, freedom has meaning as the unconstrained actual or potential realization of a possibility; or, negatively, it is the lack of impediments for realizing a possibility. The language is modal because it is built upon the modal operators of possibility and necessity by way of associating freedom with possibility, so that freedom is negatively related to necessity. Necessity can be understood as physical or normative constraint. In the first case, freedom coincides with the lack of impediments to a specific motion.⁸ Thanks to this language, the conditions of prison and slavery are negative: both constitute deprivations of one's freedom; and running, flying, et cetera are used as metaphors of freedom. In the second case, freedom coincides with the lack of coercion towards a specific action. All political and social freedoms are based on this.⁹ On the other hand, the operator of possibility introduces the concept of "choice." Choice implies the contemporary availability of a plurality of possibilities, all potentially realizable.¹⁰ Therefore, the modal language of freedom is the condition for conceptualizing freedom as the determination of a single reality out of a whole system (or world) of possibilities. In other words, this language negates determinism.

2. Deontic Language of Freedom. According to this language, freedom has meaning as the realization of a norm. The language is deontic because it uses the deontic operators of obligation (deontic necessity) and permission (deontic possibility). In the deontic case, and contrary to the modal case, freedom coincides with being determined normatively. Freedom is the fact that a norm is the principle of determination of the will. Thus, the "choice" of not being normatively determined (that is, infringing the law) deontically corresponds to a lack of freedom.¹¹ However, instead of opposing modal and deontic languages, it is more correct to consider them in relationship to one another: deontic language

⁸ This also includes the mechanistic conception of freedom, such as in Hobbes, De Cive: I–III; VIII, 2–9; IX, 9.

⁹ For instance, the famous "four freedoms," freedom of speech (or of expression), freedom of worship, freedom from want, and freedom from fear, have meaning according to the modal language of freedom. Also, all political struggles for the equality of minorities are claimed to be fights for the freedom of such minority by the application of this language (freedom of vote, of education, of marriage, et cetera). The same is true of movements of independence, secessionism, or autonomy when they are understood as movements for freedom (or, rather, for the freedom of the party or cluster demanding its autonomy).

¹⁰ This does not mean that all possibilities share the same degree of attainability: it may be that one possibility can be realized more easily than another; yet, all possibilities are, to some extent, within reach, so that all of them can become reality. Thus, modal "freedom" means choosing between two or more physical options, or between the accomplishment and the infringement of a norm.

¹¹ Unless the infringement is carried out for the sake of another norm perceived as higher than the one broken.

operates according to the model of modal language. A norm expresses a non-modal necessity, because according to the norm there is only one option that can be realized: what the norm prescribes. Yet, modally speaking, this “one option” is still a possibility, since its opposite (the infringement of the norm) is also possible. Therefore, the deontic language of freedom is the condition for conceptualizing freedom as “second nature,” as formulation and realization of a system of laws (deontic necessity) distinct and parallel to the system of natural laws (modal necessity): the normative system of laws.¹²

¹² I think the highest expression of this second formal language of freedom is Kant’s effort (in his second Critique) to approach the issue of freedom not in light of the existence of the good person (as he does in his Grundlegung: BA 1–2, Ak IV 394), but instead in light of the fact that there are principles of determination of the will (see Id., KpV: A 35, Ak V 19) – that is, in light of the Faktum of practical reason, the fact that there is another way of thinking other than the theoretical one (the normative way, or deontic language). This is a paradigmatic shift: instead of deducing the norm from the good, thinking the good from the norm (see ivi: A 110–111, Ak V 62–63). Freedom is the condition according to which this “second” use of reason exists, and it is known and understood as the determination of the will’s necessity (as causa noumenon; see ivi: A 97, Ak V 55; see infra, Ch. 8 section 3). More precisely, freedom is the autonomy of practical reason in its transcendental activity, as pure practical reason, defined by the fundamental law of pure practical reason (or “categorical imperative”; see ivi: A 54, Ak V 30–31). For this reason, freedom is “transcendental” (see Id., KrV: A 803 B 831, Ak III 521–522; KpV: A 173, Ak V 96–97): it is the ratio existendi of the principles of this noumenal causality (that is, of norms as the sole principles of determination of the will). As such, transcendental freedom is completely “other” from nature and the system of phenomenal necessity (while practical freedom, the empirical assumption of a norm, is still a natural thing; see Schönecker, Kants Begriff: 85–92, in particular 86; again, see infra, Ch. 8 section 3). Additionally, Hegel’s conception of right is based on the distinction between a legality of nature and a legality of freedom: right is, at the same time, the logical way according to which the will thinks about freedom (which is, in turn, the will thinking the will’s own freedom in prescriptive terms, that is, the will wanting to be free will; see Hegel, Grundlinien: § 27, 34), and the reality of this thinking, the manifestation of this free self-reflection of the will upon itself (see ivi: § 29, 34). So, the system of right is at the same time the condicio sine qua non of the reality of freedom, and the condicio sine qua non of the conceptual expression of freedom. Right is a “second nature” (see ivi: § 4, 14), the “law of nature” of the freedom of the will (see Riedel, Studien: 63), a form of legality determined by a negative reference to the natural legality (see Becchi, Hegel: 205–207). Hence, freedom is real as right, that is, as a will that determines itself independently of natural determination (see Hegel, Encyclopädie: 415). I will also mention the concept of freedom as the evolution of the right towards its fulfilment: in this sense, freedom is the Constitution, the norm that founds and validates all constituted norms. Freedom is legislation on the legislation. This is Rousseau’s conception of freedom as volonté générale (see Rousseau, Du contrat social: IV, 2), a form of “second nature” which, contrary to this or that specific system of right, is universal, not formally (as a form of thinking), but normatively, as meta-norm (see ivi: I, 7, the famous “on le forcera d’être libre”). Another step in this direction is the coincidence between the meta-normative criteria of validation and the meta-normative operation of validation: this is what Habermas proposes in his Diskursethik (see Habermas, Faktizität: 203–206). On the issue of the meta-norm, see infra, Ch. 6 section 5.

3. Typological Language of Freedom. According to this language, freedom has meaning as biconditional relationship between particularity and universality, between life and concept (of this life). This is the relationship: a life manifests and formulates its own concept, the law to which it belongs; and vice-versa a concept, a law, can be understood only in this living incarnation. This biconditional connection is called “type.”¹³ The aesthetic nature of this language is evident: freedom is the power of self-creation, creation of something that is the universal law of itself, as in the case of aesthetic legality.¹⁴ So, the typological language of freedom is the condition for conceptualizing freedom as mutual conditionality of life and law, personality and destiny, existence and meaning. Freedom is being, and simultaneously stating to be, a modus loquendi et vivendi. I identify and discuss three sub-forms of this language: 1. Freedom as aesthetic self-education, or as the correlation between a life informed by a virtue and a virtue understandable only through its living expressions¹⁵; 2. Freedom as self-election, as in the existential choice (a contingent determination is chosen as the meaning of an existence),¹⁶ or in the

¹³ I refer here mainly to Kant, KpV: A 119–127, Ak V 67–71, and KU: § 59, Ak V 351–354. The “type” is the symbol that builds an analogical relationship (a proportion) between two entirely different things in light of the identity of their forms (on analogy, see Kant, Prolegomena: § 58, Ak IV 357–360; Id., KrV: A 179–180 B 222–223, Ak III 160–161, Ak IV 122–123). See also Lukács and his theory of the typical (The Historical Novel); the influence that Neo-Kantianism (in particular Emil Lask) had on Lukács’s early conception of aesthetics should not be neglected. See Id., Heidelberger; see also Feenberg, “Reification”: 175–177. See infra, Ch. 9 section 2.

¹⁴ I follow here Cohen’s conception of aesthetic legality: see Cohen, Ästhetik: 74–78. For an analysis of aesthetic legality, please see Vestrucci, “Music”: 47–48.

¹⁵ I refer here principally to Schiller’s concepts of “Anmut” and “Würde,” based on an aesthetic relationship between moral law and the will: see Schiller, Anmut: in particular 282–287; for a more exhaustive analysis of this issue, and its confrontation with Kantian ethics, please refer to Vestrucci, “A unidade.”

¹⁶ There is a thread that runs from Kierkegaard to contemporary positions, such as that of Ágnes Heller. Freedom is life endowed with meaning. This is based on choosing not between many options, as in the modal case, but a single option: the unchosen determinations of one’s life – such as one’s physical and psychological traits, or the contingencies of life. What could not be an object of a choice is now this object of choice, what was received is now transformed into a realization – into self-realization. Some examples: the election of a person as one’s spouse, as the other half of one’s life (a commitment, a meaning, that the Seducer will never be able to understand) (see Kierkegaard, “Diary”); the capacity of making binding choices as evidence of a fulfilled personality in equilibrium between its aesthetic specificity and its universal ethical dimension (see Id., “Equilibrium”: in particular 482–483); the capacity to make promises and keep the given word, thus giving authenticity to one’s life (see Nietzsche, Zur Genealogie); the choice of oneself as good person, as this specific, aesthetic, aspect of goodness (see Heller, Morals: chapter 1), or as a unique person, as work of art (see Heller, An Ethics: part two). These themes will be taken back in infra, Ch. 10 sections 5–7. retrospective self-destination¹⁷; and 3. Freedom as archetype, as repetition of fixed mythological-psychological-literary patterns.¹⁸

These three formal languages are logics of freedom because they set the rules for the predication of different classes of concepts of freedom: modal, deontic, and typological. In fact, the first two languages refer to specific branches of logic. As such, there are theorems for each language: for the modal conceptualization of freedom, necessity and freedom exclude each other; for the deontic conceptualization of freedom, a norm implies its realizability; and for the typological conceptualization of freedom, the formulation of meaning and the object of meaning are co-conditioned.

These are the logics, and the theorems, that De servo arbitrio questions and reshapes.¹⁹

5. Criticisms and Clarifications

My approach may provoke some criticisms. I will try to respond to them.

First, the criticism of anachronism. While outlining the three formal languages of freedom, I referred to authors that lived and wrote much later than Erasmus and Luther. It might be argued that it is absurd to establish a connection from these authors to Erasmus and Luther. This criticism disregards that these languages are formal; they are the logics of every possible discourse on freedom, past, present, and future, including Erasmus's (and, consequently, Luther's) discourse, and the discourse of those after them. Therefore, the order of things must be reversed. This or that historical discourse on freedom is not the ratio existendi of such forms, but their ratio cognoscendi, and vice-versa, the forms are the rationes existendi (the answers to the quaestio juris) of the meaningfulness of historical discourses on freedom. The forms are the functions, and the historical languages are the value of these functions.

Clearly, it is possible to ask what originates first, the forms or the "matters," the conditions of conceptualization or the historical concepts of freedom. And yet this question is sterile, because both opposing answers are based upon a

¹⁷ I refer here principally to Schopenhauer, "Transcendent Speculation."

¹⁸ Here, I refer mainly to the conception of freedom issued from the remarkable synergy of the geniuses of Karoly Kerényi, Carl Gustav Jung, and Thomas Mann around the connection between the typical, the mythical, and the psychological. This synergy is analyzed in infra, Ch. 12 sections 2 and 3.

¹⁹ It is notable that these formal languages have different degrees of self-evidence. The modal language of freedom is certainly the most intuitive, and the typological one is perhaps the most counterintuitive because of the biconditional relationship between who speaks and what is said. This confirms that Luther does not attack an intuitive method of thinking about freedom in order to replace it with a counter-intuitive one, but it is precisely their function as methods and meters of meaningfulness to be attacked.

Index of References

Old Testament

Genesis		Ecclesiastes
25:23	220	15:16	123
17:1	25
Exodus		Sirach
9:12	220	15:14	118
33:17–23	86	15:16	122
Deuteronomy		Isaiah
30:10	116	45:9	210
1 Samuel		Jeremiah
2:6–8	26	10:23	118
		18:6	210
Psalms		Ezekiel
14:1	235	18:23–24, 31–32	48
22	281	18:23, 32	100
135:6	24	18:31	122–123
145:14	26	33:11	219
Proverbs		Malachi
21:1	118	1:2	220, 287

New Testament

Matthew		20:40	128
5:45	263	26:14, 47	290
6:10	101, 260	26:21	290
10:4	290	27:5	29
16:24, 25	122	27:46	21
19:17, 21	116
19:17	122	Mark
19:21	122	14:10, 20	290
20:15	236	14:18	290

15:34	281	9:19	25
Luke		9:20a	266
1:52	26	9:21	221–222
9:23	116	9:22–23	210
22:3	290	11:33	101, 152
22:3b	290	11:36	25
22:47	290
		1 Corinthians
John		1:23	43
6:64b	290	2:10	85
6:70, 71	290	12:6	25
8:15	153	13:10	266
12:4	290
13:1	290	2 Corinthians
13:2, 27a	290	12:9	48
13:21	290
14:6	234	Galatians
14:15	122	3:10	163
14:23–27	57	3:17–18	145
15:7	116, 122	3:24	133
16:8–9	142	5:16–26	232
18:4	290
		Philippians
Acts		2:5–8	35
1:17	290	2:13	118
1:18	290
		2 Thessalonians
Romans		2:4	90
2:4	116
3:4	28	1 Timothy
3:10–12	129	6:16	107
3:19	129
3:20–28	163	2 Timothy
4:4–5	172	2:19	28, 222
4:8	172	2:20–21	221–222
4:9–12	145	4:17	86
7:7	128
7:14–25	232	Titus
8:14	233	1:2	28
9:6	28
9:11	286	Hebrews
9:12	286	11:6	28
9:13	220, 287
9:16	118	1 Peter
9:17–18	220	2:1	20

Index of Names

- Adam, A. 33
Ailly, P. de 55, 56
Alfsvåg, K. 16, 26, 243
Althaus, P. 42, 126
Aquinas, T. 18, 19, 32, 50, 71, 118, 143
Annas, J. 26
Aristotle 26, 38, 103, 158, 164, 237
Arnold, M. 64
Askani, H.-C. 49, 67, 110, 240, 242,
248, 264–265, 271, 272, 274, 282,
296
Assmann, J. 279
Augustine 18, 19, 48, 63, 268
Auweele, D. V. 183, 186, 187
- Bader, G. 20, 22, 62, 63, 64, 65, 236
Bach, J. S. 146, 290
Bachmann, I. 60
Barth, K. 72, 73, 84–87, 89, 91–95, 96,
99, 107, 108, 111, 131, 133, 149,
151, 152, 197, 235, 263, 295
Bauch, B. 201, 203, 206
Bayer, O. 45, 67, 70, 80, 110, 143, 224,
255, 263
Becchi, P. 8
Beisser, F. 42
Benedict XVI (Ratzinger, J.) 70, 293
Benton, R. J. 167
Biechler, J. E. 57
Biel, G. 57
Bielfeldt, D. D. 42, 55–57, 77, 78, 80,
81, 83, 159, 172
Billings, J. T. 82
Bizer, E. 143
Blaumeister, H. 71
Bloch, E. 280
Bof, G. 95
Boniolo, G. 32
Borges, J. L. 291
- Borgonovo, G. 68, 69
Bornkamm, H. 16, 243
Boyle, M. O. 22, 62
Brosché, F. 264
Bultmann, R. 127, 132, 242, 243
Buntfuß, M. 58
Büttgen, P. 63, 237, 243, 244, 287
- Calvin, J. 263–265
Caputo, W. 65
Carondelet, J. de 16
Cassirer, E. 5, 216
Chalamet, C. 85, 86, 87, 94
Chantraine, G. 29
Cohen, H. 9, 11, 72–73, 75, 216
Conche, M. 268–270
Constant, B. 166–167
Cooper, D. E. 158
Corkery, J. 70
- Dalferth, I. U. 61
Dannemann, R. 217
Dante Alighieri 237, 288
De Mey, P. 71
De Michelis Pintacuda, F. 16
Dostoevsky, F. 267–269
DiCenso J. J. 286
Dummett, M. 237
Dunn, J. D. G. 127
Dupré, L. 249
- Ebeling, G. 78, 80, 89, 94–97, 99, 100, 107, 111, 131–133, 142, 145, 149,
151, 243, 244, 247
- Feenberg, A. 9
Ferrario, F. 31, 110, 259
Feuerbach, L. A. 227
Firestone, C. L. 206

- Fischer, S. 72
 Flórez, J. A. 103
 Forde, G. 16, 204, 207
 Forsberg, J. 288
 Freud, S. 279
 Frey, J. 127
- Galbraith, E. 197
 Gasché, R. 215
 George, S. 279
 Gestrich, C. 212, 233
 Gliotti, G. 73, 75
 Gogarten, F. 132, 148, 164, 235, 260,
 264, 265, 287
 Goethe, J. W. von 5, 167, 180, 216, 217, 281, 289, 290
 Grane, L. 16
 Gregersen, N. H. 171
 Grosshans, H.-P. 43, 247
- Habermas, J. 8
 Hacker, P. 70
 Halbfass, W. 70
 Hamann, J. G. 67
 Hampson, D. 29, 65, 67
 Hare, R. M. 117
 Härle, W. 175
 Harvey, V. A. 227
 Heidegger, M. 242, 243
 Heinz, J. 263
 Heit, A. 53, 195, 203, 204, 231
 Hegel, G. W. F. 8
 Heller, Á. 9, 210, 211, 216, 217, 241, 246
 Herder, J. G. 180
 Hermann, W. 72, 73
 Herms, E. 3, 30, 66, 69, 264
 Hesselink, J. I. 126
 Hinlicky, P. R. 272
 Hirsch, E. 182, 185, 201, 203, 204
 Hobbes, T. 7
 Hobson, T. 62
 Holm, B. K. 127
 Horton, M. 131
- Insole, C. 184, 200, 201
 Iwand, H. J. 145, 150, 152, 153
- Jacobi, F. H. 180
- Jacobs, N. 206
 Jenson, M. 35, 37
 Jenson, R. W. 185
 Jeon, J. K. 263
 Jeronim, T. 244
 Joest, W. 65, 131, 133, 231
 Jung, C. G. 10, 279
 Jüngel, E. 23, 34, 36, 38, 50, 54, 55,
 57–60, 89, 96–102, 106, 107, 111,
 176, 228, 244, 248, 267
 Juntunen, S. 77, 78, 81
- Kahn, C. H. 18
 Kane, R. 25
 Kant, I. 2, 8, 9, 11, 13, 27, 29, 58, 66,
 67, 82, 118, 122, 129, 156, 163, 167,
 179–207, 215, 252, 286, 299
 Kärkkäinen, V.-M. 34, 57, 83, 243
 Karlstadt, A. 19
 Käsemann, E. 127
 Kelsen, H. 152, 165
 Kerényi, K. 10, 267, 277, 279, 280
 Kierkegaard, S. 67, 85, 224, 241, 243, 246
 Kim, Y. S. 47
 Klages, L. 279
 Kling, D. W. 143
 Kluback, W. 72
 Kolb, R. 3, 5, 17, 27, 224
 Kopperi, K. 74
 Korn, E.-R. 70
 Korthaus, M. 47
 Köves, M. 218
 Kraal, A. 25, 27, 29, 33
 Krodel, G. 153
 Kröger, M. 143
- Lamanna, M. 158
 Lang, J. 16
 Laplace, P.-S. de 51
 Lask, E. 9, 11
 Lessing, G. E. 12
 Lillback, P. A. 143
 Lindhardt, J. 33
 Lobe, M. 204
 Loewenich, W. von 47, 48, 72, 91
 Lohse, B. 65
 Lohse, E. 127
 Lotze, R. H. 73

- Lukács, G. 17, 216–218, 247
 Lüpke, J. von. 67
- Maffei, A. 71, 83, 159
 Małysz, P. J. 18, 65, 142, 151
 Maritain, J. 69
 Mann, T. v, 10, 14, 217, 218, 275–281, 289, 290
 Mannermaa, T. 72, 73, 77–79, 140, 157, 159, 288
 Markus, J. 218
 Marshall, P. 71
 Martin, W. 118, 124, 191
 Massing, M. 5
 Mattes, M. 55, 57, 61, 160
 Mattox, M. L. 71
 McCormack, B. L. 87, 91
 McGrath, A. E. 63, 143, 156, 159, 175, 176
 McSorley, H. J. 16, 17, 28, 33, 71
 Menacher, W. 78
 Meyer-Rohrschneider, I. 106, 244
 Miegge, G. 143
 Mill, J. S. 103
 Milton, J. 132
 Milz, B. 118
 Mjaaland, M. T. 109
 Mogk, R. 73
 Mozart, W. A. 241, 266
 Müller, K. W. 48, 101
- Nelson, D. R. 127, 243
 Nietzsche, F. 9, 215, 246
- Oakes, K. 73, 84
 Oberman, H. 56, 57
 Otto, W. F. 280
 Oz, A. 291
- Palmquist, S. 206
 Pascal, B. 67, 110
 Pasternack, L. 184, 200, 201
 Paul 42, 47, 49, 85, 101, 127, 129, 152, 172, 221, 233
 Paulsen, F. 180
 Peirce, C. S. 103
 Pelikan, J. 243
 Perelman, C. 152
 Pettoello, R. 52
- Peura, S. 156, 157, 159, 172
 Plato 158
 Platow, M. 4
 Poma, A. 75
 Prenter, R. 243
 Preus, R. D. 156
 Proust, M. 278
- Raunio, A. 78, 79
 Ravasi, S. 64
 Reid, D. 159
 Reinhuber, T. 62, 253, 266, 272
 Ricca, P. 228
 Riedel, M. 8
 Rieger, H.-M. 183–185, 202
 Ringleben, J. 64
 Rocci, A. 32
 Rosin, R. 5
 Rossi, P. 200
 Rostagno, S. 175
 Rousseau, J.-J. 8
- Saarinen, R. 29, 55, 73, 77, 80, 84, 127, 157–159, 223, 231, 236, 243, 288
 Sanders, E. P. 127
 Scheler, M. 118
 Schelling, F. W. J. 282
 Schiller, F. 9, 180, 216, 217, 290
 Schlögel, H. 244
 Schönecker, D. 8
 Schopenhauer, A. 10, 246, 279, 289
 Schulken, C. 123
 Schulz, H. 242, 243
 Schumacher, W. 83
 Schwanke, J. 236
 Schwarzwäller, K. 3, 29, 83, 272
 Scott Clark, R. 159, 161, 169, 172, 177, 207, 263
 Sidgwick, H. 187–188
 Sievers, S. 18, 293
 Slochower, H. 281
 Spalatin, G. 16
 Spinoza, B. 214
 Staten, J. C. 243
 Stäudlin, C. F. 182
 Steiner, G. 241
 Steinmetz, D. C. 143
 Stjerna, K. I. 78, 157
 Stoellger, P. 140

- Subilia, V. 143, 151, 238
Suppes, R. 82
- Terezakis, K. 67, 246
Thaidigsmann, E. 47
Tranvik, M. D. 3
Trinkaus, C. 16
- Vainio, O.-P. 157, 159, 288
Valla, L. 27, 33
Vazsonyi, M. 217
Vercruyse, J. E. 69
Vestrucci, A. 9, 60, 167, 210, 211,
215–217, 241
Vidali, P. 32
Vivaldi, A. 52
- Wabel, T. 55
- Walter, G. 147
Wand, R. 185–187, 188
Watson, P. S. 66
Weil, É. 182, 199, 215, 216
Wengert, T. 82, 172
White, G. G. 55–57, 74
White, R. M. 58, 118, 190, 193
Whiting, M. S. 143
Wilckens, U. 127, 132
Witte, P. de. 77
Wittgenstein, L. J. J. 60
Wöhle, A. H. 126
Wolff, J. 113
Wright, N. T. 127
Wright, W. 33
Wübbenhorst, K. 264
Wüthrich, M. D. 172, 177

Index of Subjects

- Abduction; see inference
Abel 276, 277, 280
Abrogatio legis 143–144, 154
– see also antinomianism
– vs. secundus usus legis 132–133;
 see also secundus usus legis
Absurdity 1, 11, 63, 66, 118, 189, 220, 246, 288, 289
– Erasmus’s criticism of ~ against Luther 1–4, 45, 62, 69, 133, 148, 212, 219, 221, 226, 292, 297
Action 22, 29, 32, 33, 237, 251, 259,
 300 – and responsibility 223, 292–294;
 see also responsibility
– of God 23, 44, 47, 97, 162, 164,
 194, 198; see also potentia, voluntas
– of God upon human life 210, 219–
 224, 229–238, 242, 247, 248, 251–
 253, 260, 263, 266, 285, 292; see also life’s meaning – of realization of a possibility 7, 17
– of realization of an obligation 116–
 119, 123, 131, 144, 163–167, 181–
 184, 194, 212, 218, 223, 236; see also obligation, ought → can – of violation of an obligation 135, 137–138, 165–170, 238; see also imputation
Adam and Eve 132
Adiaphoron morale 154
– Luther’s rejection 23, 144, 231
Adonis 280
Aesthetics 9, 75
– aesthetic legality 9, 216, 241, 294
– and archetype 279, 281
– and predestination 265, 299; see also predestination
– and theology 275, 291; see also theology
– and typological language of freedom 9, 216–218; see also typologi-cal language of freedom
Analogy 9, 157, 215, 241, 275
– and metaphor 57–58; see also nova lingua
– as form of theological language 58– 59, 106; see also metalanguage, theology and metalinguistic level
– as method for the Luther-Kant relationship 183, 185–187, 189, 202
– between deontic and modal language 121; see also deontic language of freedom
Anthropocentrism 66–67
– supposed ~ in Luther 68–70
Anthropology 2, 71, 184
– and theology in Luther 162, 227–
 228
– in Luther’s De libertate christi- ana 35, 228
Anthropomorphism of language 60–61;
 see also metalanguage
Antinomianism 131, 143–144, 149–
 151, 205; see also abrogatio legis
Antinomy of reason 25, 29, 188; see also reason
Antithesis 97, 144–145
– as Luther’s style in theology 22, 23,
 34, 69, 230, 231
– between potentia absoluta and po- tentia ordinata (and reinterpretation of) 92–95, 100, 253–257, 260; see also potentia
– between election and rejection (and reinterpretation of) 283–287, 295,
 299; see also election

- between Law and Gospel (and reinterpretation of) 148–150; see also Law and Gospel
- between salvation and damnation (and reinterpretation of) 233–242, 247, 250, 260, 262–263, 266; see also salvation
- between Deus absconditus and Deus revelatus (and reinterpretation of) 89–94, 100–102, 108–109; see also Deus absconditus
- Aphrodite 280
- Apokatastasis* 142, 250
- Apogetics, negation of 11–12
- Archetype 218, 275, 277, 278
 - and ectype 286
 - and literature 275–281
 - and theology 282–287
 - as mythological pattern 279–281
 - as psychological concept 279
- Argument ad absurdum 6, 11, 19, 73, 75, 102, 181
 - Erasmus's first ~ 116–122, 133
 - Erasmus's second ~ 210–212, 218–221
- Articulus stantis et cadentis ecclesiae* 160–161
 - see also justification
 - and the articulus complex 175–178
- Assequi*
 - and deductive inference in theology 51–53; see also inference
 - in De servo arbitrio 49–50
- Assertio* 19, 39, 244–245
 - and collatio 64; see also collatio
 - and paradox 63; see also paradox
 - metalinguistic nature of ~ 62, 70, 74, 76; see also theology and formal conditions
- Assertio omnium articulorum*, Luther's work 1, 4–5, 16, 20, 62, 64, 133
- Astarte 280
- Attis 280
- Autonomy 8, 75, 187–188
 - see also deontic language of freedom
- Babel 64
- Cain 276, 277
- Certainty 49, 69, 95, 98, 43, 149, 167–169, 244–245, 289
 - and Deus absconditus 108–110; see also Deus absconditus
 - and faith 53–54, 196, 244, 266; see also faith
 - and predestination 251, 262–264; see also predestination
- Claritas scripturae* 21, 41–45, 69, 200, 244, 283
- Collatio* as Erasmus's method 20, 39, 64
- Compatibilism 25; see also determinism
- Conditions of conceptualization of freedom; see formal languages of freedom
- Damnation; see salvation
- Deduction; see inference
- Deontic language of freedom 6–8
 - and forgiveness 137–138; see also forgiveness
 - and modal language of freedom 118–122; see also modal language of freedom
 - and typological language of freedom 211–213; see also typological language of freedom
 - formalization 119–120
 - in Erasmus's argumentation 117–118, 122
 - Luther's modification of ~ 123–124, 128–130, 150–151, 190
 - theological limitation of ~ 131–140, 144, 147–148, 152–154, 206–207
- Determinism 29, 118
 - see also Deus absconditus, voluntas
 - and liberum arbitrium 7, 25, 188; see also liberum arbitrium
 - and necessity 32–34; see also necessity
 - and predestination 259–260; see also predestination
 - negation of a supposed ~ in De servo arbitrio 29–31, 33
- Deus absconditus* 21, 48, 72, 84, 89–113, 225, 298
 - and Deus predicatus 89–90, 108

- and Deus revelatus 106, 108–109, 112–113, 148, 254
- and divine promise 146–148; see also divine promise
- and potentia absoluta 92–93, 95, 100, 260; see also potentia
- and predestination 260–261, 265; see also predestination
- and revelation 101–102, 104–106, 108; see also revelation
- and theological inferences 102–107, 109–112–113; see also inference
- formalization of ~ 111–113
- in Barth 85, 91–94, 99, 107–108, 111, 149
- in Ebeling 94–95, 99, 111, 107
- in Jüngel 96–100, 102, 107, 111
- meta-conceptual function 105–106, 261
- Deus otiosus* 266
- Dionysus 280
- Divine commandments 6, 116–118, 122, 123, 132, 221
 - see also law, obligation, secundus usus legis, sin, Sollen
 - and justification 156, 163, 164, 221
 - and non-revealed obligations 125–128, 139–140, 232, 262
 - and secundus usus legis 133–134
 - and sin 128–131
 - Luther and Kant’s difference on ~ 186, 188–191, 193–202, 204–205
- Divine promise of forgiveness 28, 138, 151–154
 - see also promise
 - and Deus absconditus 146–148
 - and Gospel 148–151, 162
 - and predestination 262
 - realization of ~ 145–146
 - vs. deontic language 138–140, 143–144, 148–150, 154, 197
- Divine revelation; see revelation
- Divinization 157
- Dumuzi 276, 280
- Election 99, 140, 196, 197
 - see also life’s meaning, love, predestination, salvation, typological language of freedom
 - and life’s meaning 251, 274, 275, 286–288, 291–296
 - and love 288–289, 294
 - and predestination 263, 288
 - and rejection 258, 283–286, 290, 294–295, 299; see also antithesis
 - vs. self-election 219–220, 226, 231–232, 239; see also existential choice
- Esau; see Jacob and Esau
- Eschaton* 54, 145–147, 272; see also divine promise of forgiveness
- Eve; see Adam and Eve
- Existential choice 9, 217–218, 246–247
- Existentialism 240–242
 - and theology 132, 229, 242, 245, 247–249, 272, 299
 - as supposed approach to Luther’s theology 69, 79, 157–158, 243
- Faith 28, 49, 68, 71, 77, 84, 107, 127, 157, 172, 180
 - and reason 45, 69–70, 75, 205; see also reason
 - and salvation 231–232, 234, 240, 242; see also salvation
 - as freedom 36, 53
 - as meta-certainty 53, 54, 62, 69–70, 153, 166, 244, 249, 251, 270; see also certainty and faith
 - in Kant 194, 199–200
 - supreme degree of ~ 54, 252–253, 270
- Fallacy 11, 83, 108, 124, 149, 157
 - affecting Erasmus’s argumentation 40–41, 122; see also petitio principii
 - affecting Luther’s argumentation 128–129, 132
 - affecting the Luther-Kant relationship 185, 189, 202, 205
 - theological ~ 3, 31, 61, 108, 153, 168, 227, 257, 288–289, 294
- Finnish School 72, 77–80, 140, 157–158
 - criticisms of Neo-Kantianism in theology 73–75, 77–78, 157
 - criticisms of the ~ 73, 80–84, 161, 172–173, 243
- Foreknowledge; see praescientia

- Forgiveness 23, 116, 204, 205
 – see also divine promise of forgiveness, imputation, justice, sin – and God's imputative justice 152, 197–199
 – and God's retributive justice 238, 253
 – and hypothetical imperative 143–144
 – and justification 157, 159
 – and sin 138, 141–142, 195
 – deontic meaning 136–138
 – theological meaning 136–138, 147, 150, 154, 165, 194–195
- Formal languages of freedom 2–12, 28, 73, 76, 81, 144, 216, 298
 – see also deontic language of freedom; modal language of freedom; typological language of freedom – and De servo arbitrio 3, 31, 61–65, 69
 – and theological language 54, 58–60, 65–67, 71, 76, 87–88, 104, 109–110, 145, 170, 231, 245, 248, 274
 – in Erasmus's argumentation 2, 17
- Forms of freedom; see formal languages of freedom
- Frastic 117–124, 128–131, 133, 136, 144, 164, 166, 167, 181, 213, 232
- Free will 1, 8, 188; see also liberum arbitrium
- Freedom
 – see also formal languages of freedom
 – as object of discourse 1, 20, 41, 75
 – De servo arbitrio as meta-discourse on ~ 2, 27–28, 30, 62–67, 73–76, 82, 113, 127, 228, 297–298; see also meta-discourse – deontic concept 119–121, 154, 170, 182–185, 189, 197, 204–205, 212
 – human ~ 9, 31–37, 70, 188, 200, 203, 206, 228, 259; see also liberum arbitrium
 – in De libertate christiana 35–37, 228
 – in Kant 8, 181–182, 187–188
 – modal concept 24–25, 29, 113, 227
 – of God 9, 23–28, 31, 89–90, 94, 101, 107–109, 145–147, 174, 177, 194, 199; see also liberum arbitrium, potentia
 – paradox of ~ 35, 46, 53, 54, 90; see also paradox – theology as ~ 1–2, 4–5, 34–35, 37, 53, 64–65, 110, 140–141, 153–154, 170, 176–177, 239–240, 245, 248, 273–274, 294–296, 298, 300 – typological concept 215–220, 222, 224, 237, 239, 246–247, 259, 277–278, 290
- Gospel 28, 43, 159, 163, 293
 – see also Law and Gospel
 – and justification 176–177
 – as meta-norm 150–151
- Grace 35, 85, 127, 185–186, 290, 292
 – and election 284–289, 295; see also election
 – and forgiveness 136, 140, 144–145, 149, 152; see also forgiveness
 – and justification 163, 166, 168, 170, 173–174, 178, 238; see also justification
 – and the possibility of theology 273–275, 294, 296; see also theology
 – Erasmus on ~ 17–19, 219, 274
 – in De servo arbitrio 21, 24, 136, 143, 163, 273
 – in Kant 195–198, 203
- Grand Inquisitor (Dostoevsky) 267, 269–271
- Hidden God; see Deus absconditus
- Immutability
 – and anthropology 227, 231; see also anthropology – and necessity; see necessitas immutabilitatis
 – and time 26, 223
 – of God's praescientia and voluntas 26, 29, 223; see also praescientia, voluntas
- Imperative 116–118, 122–123, 130, 143, 184, 188, 190, 191; see also law, norm, obligation, Sollen

- and divine commandments 125; see also divine commandments
- categorical ~ 8, 187
- Imperative mood 122–123, 125, 154, 166; see also ought → can
- Luther’s radicalization of the distinction between imperative and indicative moods 122–123; see also secundus usus legis, Sollen
- Imputation
 - and imputative justice 155, 165–170, 254; see also justice, imputative
 - and possibility of realizing an obligation 116, 135; 137, see also obligation, ought → can
 - and retributive justice 238, 293; see also justice, retributive
 - and theological concept of justification 46, 156–157, 166, 168–170, 172, 238
 - towards God 254–255, 268
- Indicative mood; see imperative mood
- Induction; see inference
- Inference 32, 55, 58, 163, 165–166, 168, 253
 - abductive 103
 - deductive 30, 42–44, 50–52, 57, 103, 105, 107–109, 122, 152, 190
 - in theology 53, 72, 103–105, 147–148, 161, 176, 199, 260–262
 - inductive 103–105, 167, 212
- Inopia verborum*
 - and metaphor 58–59; see also nova lingua
 - and theological language 60–62; see also theology
- Isaac 276, 278
- Ishtar 276, 280
- Jacob and Esau 220, 294
 - as archetypes 275–281; see also archetype
 - in De servo arbitrio 286–289
 - theological vs. literary conception 282–286
- Jesus Christ 25, 32, 35–36, 41–43, 47, 53, 61, 77–79, 81, 89–91, 93, 95, 97–99, 107, 110, 113, 145, 149, 159, 166, 172, 185–186, 196, 199–200, 221, 233, 234, 236, 269–271, 276, 281, 290–292
 - as Word of God 42–43, 200, 283
- Job 255, 266
- Joseph 275–277, 280, 281, 284
- Judas Iscariot 220, 275, 290–295
 - and election 290, 294–295; see also election
 - and necessitas immutabilitatis 223, 292; see also necessitas immutabilitatis
 - and responsibility 292–294; see also responsibility
 - and the distinction between necessitas consequentis and consequentiae 32–33, 221, 292
- Justice
 - as virtue 212
 - formal concept 167, 196, 198
 - imputative ~ 116, 155–156, 159, 164–168, 170–175, 177, 242, 298
 - precedence of retributive over imputative ~ in De servo arbitrio 156, 236–238
 - retributive ~ 155–156, 251, 254–258, 262, 294
- Justice of God 66, 69, 109, 143, 156, 184, 199, 207, 236, 258, 291, 299
 - and predestination 260–263; see also predestination
 - and theodicy 267–272; see also theodicy
 - in Kant 195–199, 203
 - independent from human concepts of justice 146, 148, 151–154, 163–164, 171, 197–198, 204–205, 220, 251–253, 257–258, 265–266, 272, 289
- Justification 46, 81, 127, 203, 228, 230, 267, 269, 298
 - as articulus 160, 175–178; see also articulus
 - effective meaning 80, 156, 158, 159, 171–172, 238, 299
 - forensic meaning 156, 158–159, 171, 299
 - imputative concept 164–168, 298
 - in De servo arbitrio 161–164
 - meta-conceptual function 170–171, 173–175, 238–239

- of God's retributive justice 99, 151, 253–256, 258, 260, 266, 268, 270–271; see also theodicy
 - ontological meaning 157–160, 172–173, 299
 - theological concept 148, 165–166, 168–170, 238, 298
- Karamazov Iván and Aleša (Dostoevsky) 13, 267, 270
- Law 7, 35–36, 47, 57, 67, 74, 116, 118, 126–127, 137, 145, 155, 204, 245, 262
- see also divine commandments, imperative, Law and Gospel in De servo arbitrio, norm, obligation, Solten
 - in Kant 180–182, 184–188, 193–197, 199–200, 203, 215, 252
 - in typological language 9, 215–217, 224–225, 231, 261, 275, 294; see also typological language of freedom
 - of deontic necessity 8, 119–121, 187; see also necessity
 - of modal necessity 9, 29–31, 67, 119, 166, 182, 197, 259
 - supposed ~ of God's voluntas 30–31, 89, 104, 146, 253–255, 260, 299
- Law and Gospel 148–154, 159, 162, 207, 232
- Liberum arbitrium* 2, 3, 57, 187, 188
- and servum arbitrium 4–5, 63–64, 227; see also servum arbitrium
 - Erasmus's definition 17, 21
 - Erasmus's three sententiae on ~ 6, 11, 18–22, 38–39, 41, 107, 117
 - of God 23–29, 31
 - language of ~ 24–25, 34–35, 39–41, 63, 107, 118–120, 122; see also modal language of freedom
 - Luther's position on ~ 2, 3, 17, 20–24, 32–34, 41–43, 45, 63, 221, 245
- Life 36, 46, 80, 98, 116, 133, 140, 149, 156, 163, 166, 172, 252, 256, 291, 292
- Life's meaning 66, 136, 207, 257
- see also election vs. self-election, predestination, self-education, typological language of freedom
 - and predestination 258–260, 264–266;
 - and divine election 261–263, 283–286, 294–295
 - and revelation 226–230, 238, 242, 271–272; see also revelation
 - and the antithesis salvation/damnation 232–236, 250, 266; see also antithesis
 - and theology 239–240, 248, 251, 257–258, 273–274, 286–289, 292, 299
 - and typological language of freedom 9, 212–215, 240–241, 275–282, 297
 - as self-attribution of meaning 141, 215–217, 246, 254–255; see also typological language of freedom
 - as self-education 210–212, 218–220
 - Luther's modification of life's self-attribution of meaning 222–226, 231–232, 237
- Logic
- and theology 32, 52–53, 62–63, 111–113, 128–130, 168–169, 299–300; see also theology
 - deontic 7–8, 117–122, 164–165
 - modal 7, 24–25, 27–28
 - typological 213–214
- Logics of freedom; see formal languages of freedom
- Love 180, 246, 267, 269, 271, 291
- commandment of ~ 128
 - of God 47, 98–99, 149, 220, 258, 287–292, 294–296; see also election
- Lumen gloriae* 54, 107, 146, 228, 266, 272
- Lumen gratiae* 54, 107, 146, 148, 228, 266
- Lumen naturae* 54, 147, 228, 266
- Merit 117, 136, 162, 194, 196, 197, 207, 231, 242, 287
- consequentiality between ~ and reward 211, 254
 - innate ~ 289–290

- Luther’s rejection of the consequentiality between ~ and reward 163–164, 237–238, 257–258; see also justice, precedence of retributive justice over imputative justice
- Merit de congruo and de condigno 162–163, 218–220, 255
- Luther’s rejection of the distinction between ~ 163, 236, 256
- Meta-discourse 2, 20–21, 76, 201, 245, 298
- Metalanguage 2, 54, 59–60, 87–88, 106, 169, 171, 265, 299
- and theology 60–67, 109
- Metalogic 2, 61
- Metaphysics 82
- Method 5, 6, 10, 46–49, 61, 79, 81–83, 111, 147, 160, 161, 176, 203 206, 260, 293
- and sub contrario 46–49, 253
- as object of De servo arbitrio 2, 4–6, 21, 37, 48, 54, 62–63, 201–202, 207
- as theology; see theology as method
- of Erasmus argumentation 19–20, 38–41
- transcendental method 73–76, 192
- Modal language of freedom 7, 10, 24–25, 29, 112, 116, 141
- and deontic language of freedom 8, 119–122; see also deontic language of freedom
- in Erasmus’s argumentation 6, 25, 39–40, 64, 107, 118
- Luther’s modification 27–28, 31, 34–35, 38, 61–63, 74, 130, 145
- Modus loquendi et vivendi* 9, 214–216, 226, 240, 274, 296; see also typological language of freedom
- Modus tollendo tollens* 111, 113, 165, 257

- Necessitas coactionis*; see necessitas immutabilitatis
- Necessitas consequentis* and necessitas consequentiae
 - and possible worlds 32–33, 292
 - distinction between ~ 32, 221, 259
 - Luther’s rejection of the distinction 32–33, 222, 292
- Necessitas immutabilitatis* 25, 28, 29
 - and divine revelation 227
 - and theological modification of life’s meaning 223–224, 292–293; see also life’s meaning, typological language of freedom
 - vs. necessitas coactionis 33, 222–223
- Necessity 25, 27, 28, 74–75, 203, 221
 - and possibility; see possibility and necessity
 - deontic 7–8, 119–123, 131–134, 154, 183, 187, 203; see also deontic language of freedom, obligation, Sollen
 - modal 7, 8, 10, 27, 29–32, 118, 121, 187, 194, 210, 259, 292, 298; see also modal language of freedom
 - of immutability; see necessitas immutabilitatis
 - operator of ~ 17, 24–25, 28, 34, 121, 259–260
 - theological conception 28–31, 34, 129–131, 134, 146, 222–224, 243, 259–260, 287
 - typological 217, 224, 246; see also typological language of freedom
- Neo-Kantianism 9, 57, 216; see also Finnish School, criticisms of Neo-Kantianism in theology
- Neustic 117, 180–181
- Norm 6, 120, 122, 126, 132, 143, 149, 167, 187, 188, 197, 205
 - see also imperative, law, obligation, Sollen
 - and deontic language of freedom 7–8, 116–117, 119, 123–124, 127–128; see also deontic language of freedom
 - and modal language of freedom 7; see also modal language of freedom
 - meta-norm 8, 150–152, 187, 205, 207; see also Gospel as meta-norm
 - normative statements and descriptive statements 117, 130 see also imperative mood, Sollen and Sein

- realization of the \sim 10, 11, 199, 204; see also obligation, connection with modal possibility, ought \rightarrow can
- Nova lingua*
 - and metalinguistic level 59–61, 104, 299
 - \sim in Luther 55, 65
 - semantic/syntactic interpretations of \sim 55–58, 83, 87; see also syllogism
- Obligation 7, 118, 119, 122, 124, 165, 169, 181
 - see also divine commandments, imperative, law, norm, Sollen
 - as deontic necessity 120–121
 - connection with modal possibility 119–124, 165, 189, 297; see also ought \rightarrow can
 - theological modification of the connection with modal possibility 128–130, 133
 - frastic of \sim ; see frastic
 - neustic of \sim ; see neustic
- Ought \rightarrow can 116–118, 136, 137, 144, 167, 170, 187, 212
 - see also obligation, connection with modal possibility
 - as deontic theorem 118, 189–190
 - in Kant 189–193, 199
 - Luther’s modification 122–130, 141, 190–192
- Paradox 20, 74, 85, 246
 - in De servo arbitrio 3–6, 24–27, 31–34, 37, 73, 89, 110, 156, 230, 237–238, 290, 298
 - theological \sim 28, 34–35, 52–54, 62–67, 174, 300
- Pelagianism 17, 22
- Petitio principii* 10–11, 83
 - affecting Erasmus’s argumentation 38–41, 64, 220; see also fallacy
- Pharaoh 220–221, 230
 - and necessitas immutabilitatis 223, 292; see also necessitas immutabilitatis
 - and responsibility 292–294; see also responsibility
- Possibility 30, 81, 86, 93, 94, 97, 98, 102, 106–108, 111, 174, 252, 260, 289
 - see also possibility and necessity
 - and deontic concept of freedom 7–8, 11, 116–118, 121–122, 135–136, 144, 163, 166, 181, 189–190, 193–195; see also deontic language of freedom
 - and deontic obligation; see obligation, possibility of realization of
 - and modal concept of freedom 7, 24–25; see also modal language of freedom
 - and typological concept of freedom 11, 210–212, 216–218; see also typological language of freedom
 - in the formula “ought implies can”; see ought \rightarrow can
 - operator of \sim 17, 119
- Possibility and necessity
 - see also determinism, possibility, necessity
 - in the deontic language of freedom 119–121, 144, 183, 203, 298; see also deontic language of freedom
 - in the modal language of freedom 24–25; see also modal language of freedom
 - in the typological language of freedom 220–221, 246–247; see also typological language of freedom
 - Luther’s modification of the relationship between \sim in the deontic language of freedom 123, 128–133, 137, 142, 146, 188, 198; in the modal language of freedom 27–28, 33; in the typological language of freedom 222–227, 233–235, 291–292
- Possible worlds; see Judas Iscariot, necessitas consequentiae and necessitas consequentis
- Potentia* 26, 107, 109, 146, 257, 264–267, 298
 - see also antithesis between potentia absoluta and potentia ordinata
 - absoluta 57, 92–95, 100, 152, 197; see also Deus absconditus

- actualis 25, 100, 145
- formally sub-ordinata 256–257
- inordinata 92, 100, 152, 253–256, 260
- ordinata 57, 92–93, 95, 100, 152, 253–256
- Praescientia*
- of God 30–33, 146, 220, 259–260
- and immutability 26–29, 223; see also immutability
- and predestination 26, 258–259; see also predestination
- human 30, 259
- Prayer 260
- Predestination 196–197, 250, 258, 284–285, 296, 298
- aesthetic meaning; see aesthetics
- and Deus absconditus 260–261; see also Deus absconditus
- and God’s retributive justice 257–258, 265, 287–288; see also justice, retributive
- comparison with Calvin 263–265
- double ~ 197, 263
- formal (epistemological) function 261–262, 266, 289, 298
- in De servo arbitrio 258–260, 286
- system of ~ 263–264, 299
- Primus usus legis* 70, 126–128, 131–133, 184, 188, 191, 201, 206, 231, 262; see also secundus usus legis, tertius usus legis
- Promise
- human 9, 138, 145–147, 262; see also divine promise of forgiveness
- Quaestio juris* 4, 10
- De servo arbitrio as ~ 3, 5, 21; see also theology as method
- Qualitas and quidditas* 247
- Radical evil
- in Kant 180–182, 186, 193–194, 196
- supposedly in Luther’s theology 182–185, 194–195
- Reason 29, 67, 69, 75, 286
- in De servo arbitrio 43–44, 101, 109–110
- in Luther 43, 45, 67, 69–70
- practical ~ 8, 181–207, 260
- Rebirth 234, 276, 247
- and justification 162, 171–172; see also justification
- formal aspect 169, 173, 229–233, 236, 242, 245
- Responsibility 25, 185
- in theology 153–154
- of Pharaoh and Judas 223, 292–294; see also Judas Iscariot, necessitas immutabilitatis, Pharaoh
- Revelation 23, 32, 72, 89–102, 145–154, 164, 166, 171, 172, 177, 186, 192, 197–201, 225, 238, 244, 247, 251–255, 282, 286
- see also Deus absconditus, Word of God
- formal unconditionality 3–5, 38–49, 52–54, 58–71, 75–76, 85–88, 102–113, 125–126, 140–141, 147, 176, 195, 204–207, 226–236, 239–240, 242, 245, 248, 261, 264–266, 269–274, 291–295
- and sin 136, 138, 142–143, 184, 271
- vs. deduction (syllogism) 42–46
- vs. satisfaction of human theoretical needs 49, 53, 60, 108–110, 142, 148, 168, 271; see also theodicy vs. theology
- Salvation 17–18, 21–24, 33–36, 66, 92, 98, 99–100, 132, 220, 228, 269
- and damnation 17, 22–24, 143, 207, 230, 233–234, 237–238, 242, 247, 258, 266, 284–289; see also antithesis between salvation and damnation
- and election 262–263, 285; see also election
- and merit de congruo and de condigno 257; see also merit
- and predestination 260–263; see also predestination
- formal aspect of 234–236, 239–240, 251
- Sanctification 83, 127, 140, 156–159, 172, 195, 199, 230–232
- Satan 23, 33–35, 145, 184, 231, 290

- Secundus usus legis* 70, 123–126, 131–133, 138, 169, 184, 188, 191, 195, 199, 231, 232, 262; see also primus usus legis, tertius usus legis
- Sein*; see Sollen and Sein
- Self-education 11, 210–212, 218–219, 227, 232
- as life’s self-attribution of meaning 223–225; see also life’s meaning
 - as typological freedom 9, 212–214, 217, 220; see also typological language of freedom
- Self-election; see election
- Servum arbitrium* 1, 4–5, 18, 34, 132
- and liberum arbitrium; see liberum arbitrium
 - as meta-concept 62–64, 122, 227
 - in Augustin 63
- Sin 33, 36, 42, 71, 99–100, 126, 153–154, 180, 186, 199, 219, 233, 243, 291, 299
- see also deontic language of freedom (theological limitation of), divine commandments, secundus usus legis
 - and divine promise of forgiveness 136–139, 141–145
 - and human life 226, 228
 - and justification 156–157, 159, 162–163, 169; see also justification
 - and language 65, 132
 - and Law and Gospel 148, 150; see also Law and Gospel in De servo arbitrio
 - and liberum arbitrium in Erasmus 17, 19, 24
 - and liberum arbitrium in Luther 22–23
 - and necessitas immutabilitatis 222; see also necessitas immutabilitatis
 - and God’s retributive justice 237, 271; see also justice, retributive
 - and rebirth 172, 197, 231–232; see also rebirth
 - and sanctification 195; see also sanctification
 - and secundus usus legis 129–133, 135–136, 184, 194–195, 204; see also secundus usus legis
- Sollen* 47, 145, 148, 149, 168, 189, 190, 192, 196, 207, 281
- see also imperative, law, norm, obligation
 - and imputation 135–139, 153, 164–168; see also imputation
 - and radical evil 180–182; see also radical evil
 - and Sein 117–118, 130–131, 141–142, 146, 164–167, 216; see also imperative mood
 - in the deontic language of freedom 116, 122, 170, 183, 187–188, 193–194, 197, 206, 231; see also deontic language of freedom
 - in the typological language of freedom 212–216; see also typological language of freedom
 - theological meaning 124–134, 140–147, 150–154, 163, 165–169, 184, 190–191, 199, 204–205, 212, 232; see also divine commandments, secundus usus legis, sin
- Soteriology 219–220
- Spirit 19, 42–44, 79, 162, 196, 230–234, 238, 242, 245, 247, 249, 263
- Sub contrario* 74, 85, 95, 97, 111
- and the methodological question in theology 48–49, 74, 253; see also theology, epistemology of
 - in De servo arbitrio 46–48, 162
 - in Luther’s Disputatio Heidelbergae habita 46–47
- Subjectivism as criticism against Luther 68–72
- Supralapsarianism 17, 264
- Syllogism 42, 219
- and revelation; see revelation and deduction
 - theological limitation of syllogistic structure 61; see also inference
 - theological 55–59
- Tertius usus legis* 126, 127, 140; see also primus usus legis, secundus usus legis
- Theodicy 1, 98–100, 220, 250, 253, 255

- see also imputation towards God, justice of God, justification of God's retributive justice, predestination and God's retributive justice
- and the suffering of children 267–269
- vs. theology 100, 270–272, 294, 298
- Theologia crucis* 46–48, 74, 78, 81, 82
 - and theologia gloriae 47
- Theologia negativa* 58, 87, 88
- Theology 1, 16, 25, 46–47, 68, 89, 148, 157, 158, 161, 179, 180, 242–243, 268
 - and deductive inference; see inference, theorem in theology
 - and formal conditions 1–3, 11–12, 52–54, 60–64, 69–70, 75–76, 87–88, 109–110, 126–138, 145–147, 165–166, 168–171, 174–177, 204–205, 224–228, 233, 238–239, 246–249, 260–263, 270–274, 288–289
 - and induction; see inference
 - and literature 274–275, 282–286, 291–295
 - and logic; see logic
 - and metalinguistic level 54, 58–61; see also meta-language
 - and transcendental philosophy 72–75, 204–205
 - apophatic; see theologia negativa
 - as freedom; see freedom, theology as
 - as meta-axiomatic system 52, 113
 - as method 5, 21, 49, 67, 69, 204–205, 299
 - as nova lingua; see nova lingua
 - dialectical 84–87
 - epistemology of 46–65, 89–110, 258–266; see also sub contrario, assequi, Deus absconditus, predestination, revelation
 - of the Cross; see theologia crucis
 - of the glory; see theologia crucis
- Theorem 10, 50–51, 117–118, 124–126, 133, 154
 - in theology 104–106, 108, 112–113, 175–176, 225, 261, 298–299
- Theory of everything 30–31, 51–52, 175–176; see also assequi
- Theosis* 78, 140, 172
- Type 9, 109, 215–218, 226, 241
 - as archetype 10, 218, 274–275, 278; see also archetype
 - as Ur-type 281
 - in Kant 215, 286
- Typological language of freedom 9–10, 212–218, 241, 274
 - see also archetype, modus loquendi et vivendi, self-education, type
 - aesthetic aspect of; see aesthetics
 - as logic of self-election 215–217, 224; see also election vs. self-election
 - in Erasmus's argumentation 6–7, 219–221
 - Luther's modification of ~ 224–227, 229–234, 236–240, 250–251
- Verbum*
 - divine ~ 42–44, , 75, 90, 195, 236; see also revelation, Word of God
 - divine ~ and human ~ 43, 45–46, 52, 60, 65, 67, 70, 76, 90, 104, 108, 147, 227, 228, 271
 - human ~ 64–66, 110, 272
- Voluntas*
 - and liberum arbitrium 18
 - human ~ 14–18, 27, 222–223, 295
 - of God 25–28, 30–32, 47, 123, 146, 152, 222–223, 253, 259–260, 262–263, 292
 - of God and Deus absconditus 89–90, 93, 96, 100–101, 104, 107; see also Deus absconditus
 - of God and immutability 26, 28, 29, 32, 223; see also immutability
- Will; see voluntas
- Word of God 42, 46, 53, 54, 86–88, 94, 96, 245
 - and revelation 43, 113, 291; see also revelation
 - as Jesus Christ; see Jesus Christ
- Word of the Cross 47, 4