Preface

This book constitutes a minor revision of my doctoral thesis entitled “The Supreme Σημεῖον of Jesus’ Death-and-Resurrection in the Fourth Gospel” submitted to the Department of Theology and Religion at the University of Otago in Dunedin, New Zealand, and defended on 30 October 2017. In this work I argue that Jesus’ death-and-resurrection is the supreme σημεῖον in the Fourth Gospel (FG). By focusing on the present text of the Gospel, without regard to questions of tradition and redaction, I discuss and defend the above proposition in three steps. Firstly, an analysis of the seventeen occurrences of the word σημεῖον in FG demonstrates that the word’s meaning and referent cannot be confined to the miraculous activity of Jesus. A Johannine σημεῖον pertains broadly to any deed of Jesus viewed from the perspective of its function of revealing Jesus as the divine Messiah and Son of God. From this perspective, the crucifixion-and-resurrection, arguably the greatest complex deed of Jesus, may be regarded as the supreme σημεῖον.

Secondly, an analysis of five important Johannine themes – namely δόξα, ὑψωσις, ἔργον, ὄρα, and πίστις – lends strong support for the thesis. Individually and collectively these themes focus on Jesus’ death-and-resurrection as the goal and climax of the narrative, as the culmination and consummation of Jesus’ salvific mission, and as the supreme revelation (hence, σημεῖον) of Jesus’ true identity.

Thirdly, an analysis of five passages from the Gospel further reinforces the thesis that Jesus’ death-and-resurrection is the supreme σημεῖον. John 2:13–22 recounts the first demand for a σημεῖον in the Gospel (v. 18), to which Jesus replies by alluding to his death-and-resurrection (vv. 19, 21). John 6 recounts the second demand for a σημεῖον (vv. 30–31), to which Jesus’ response is essentially the same: by his sacrificial death (vv. 51c–58) and resurrection (alluded to in the ἀνάβασις of v. 62), Jesus, as the bread of life (vv. 35, 48, 51c), grants eternal life to those who believe in him (vv. 35, 50–58). Jesus’ consistent response to the two demands for a σημεῖον alludes to his death-and-resurrection, showing that that complex event is what will supremely reveal his divine identity and mission.

The third passage is John 11, where the σημεῖον of the raising of Lazarus not only alludes to Jesus’ death-and-resurrection, but also precipitates the Sanhedrin’s decision to put Jesus to death (vv. 47–53). In other words, this σημεῖον precipitates the arrival of the supreme σημεῖον. The fourth passage is 19:16–37, the crucifixion account, where, although the word σημεῖον is not explicitly used, one gets a clear sense from the evangelist’s various emphases in the narrative that the crucifixion in fact validates, rather than contradicts or nullifies, Jesus’ claims to being the true Messiah. The evangelist, viewing the cross through post-Easter eyes, implicitly sees it as constituting, together with the resurrection, the supreme Christological σημεῖον.

The last passage is John 20, which recounts a catena of appearances of the risen Lord. These appearances, individually and collectively, establish for the witnesses and the readers the reality of Jesus’ resurrection. The fundamental point is that the one who was crucified is now alive again. Thus, the supreme σημεῖον is not the crucifixion alone, nor is it the resurrection alone. Apart from the resurrection, the crucifixion cannot be a positive σημεῖον for Jesus. By the same token, the resurrection presupposes the death of Jesus. Together, the crucifixion-and-resurrection constitutes the supreme σημεῖον of Jesus in FG.

Many individuals and organizations have contributed, in one way or another, to the process of writing this book – to them go my heartfelt thanks. I thank the triune God, the ultimate source of every good and perfect gift (cf. James 1:17), for making it possible for me to pursue a PhD. I am thankful for the sufficiency of His grace and provisions throughout the three years of my doctoral research.

Secondly, I acknowledge and thank the University of Otago both for the generous Doctoral Scholarship and for the environment and context conducive for productive study. I am thankful for the Humanities PhD Conference Funding which enabled me to participate and present a portion of my work in the Society of Biblical Literature (International Meeting) held in Seoul, South Korea on 3–7 July 2016. I also appreciate the kind assistance –in terms of locating and lending books and related resources – of the staff at the University of Otago’s Central Library, as well as the staff of Hewitson Library (Dunedin) of the Presbyterian Church of Aotearoa New Zealand.

Thirdly, I thank my primary supervisor, Prof. Paul R. Trebilco, for his able and expeditious supervision of my research. Having a keen eye for the big picture, Paul alerted me to areas of my work where coherence was lacking, and helped me greatly in clarifying my overall thesis as well as in seeing to it that the parts cohered with the overall argument. Paul was very prompt in reading my work and giving me feedback. I could not ask for a better Doktorvater. I also thank Dr. James E. Harding for co-supervising my thesis. Being an OT scholar, and having a keen eye for details, James was especially helpful not only where my work intersected with things related to the OT, but also in improving my argument and overall work. Without Paul’s and James’s help, I could have not finished and produced this book. But they are not to blame for whatever errors or weaknesses that remain, which are solely mine.

I acknowledge and thank the brothers and sisters in Christ at Grace Bible Church (GBC) in Dunedin, with whom I worshiped for a year. GBC helped my family a lot, specially in terms of prayer and moral support, when my first child, Angela, was born in 2015. I would like to thank Dr. Stuart Johnson, a teaching-pastor at GBC and associate principal at Grace Theological College (Dunedin), for reading and commenting on a portion of my work. I also acknowledge and thank the brothers and sisters in Christ at the Reformed Church of Dunedin, where I worshiped during the last two years of my studies. I benefited spiritually from the occasional men's group, headed by the minister, Rev. Erik Stolte, as well as from the homegroup headed by John van Dyk. I thank Dr. Friedlieb Lorenz for reading a part of my work, and for his helpful comments and suggestions.

I note my thanks also to the examiners of my thesis, whose comments and recommendations have greatly improved my overall work: Prof. Francis J. Moloney, Prof. Dorothy A. Lee, and Dr. Derek Tovey.

I am grateful to Prof. Dr. Jörg Frey for accepting this work for publication in the WUNT II monograph series, and to Katharina Gutekunst and the editorial staff at Mohr Siebeck in Tübingen for their kind assistance in the publication process.

Last but not least, I thank my wife and best friend, Guan Wang, for her love and support. Without her prayers and encouragement, this work would not have been completed. To her and our two children – Angela and Nathan – I lovingly dedicate this book.

This book follows The SBL Handbook of Style (2nd ed.) on abbreviations, notes, and bibliography. Unless noted otherwise, English translations of biblical texts are from the NRSV.

Soli Deo Gloria!

Chapter 1

Introduction

A. Statement of the Problem

As is well known, σημεῖον is among the most important and characteristic terms in the Fourth Gospel (hereafter FG). This is indicated not only by the frequency of its occurrences,¹ but also by the fact that it is the word by which the Fourth Evangelist (hereafter FE) describes Jesus' deeds. FE uses it twice to describe Jesus' public ministry as a whole (12:37; 20:30–31). He also uses it in the formulation of the Gospel's purpose statement (20:30–31).²

But what does the Johannine σημεῖον mean? What does it refer to? What is it exactly and what is it not? In this regard I believe that there exists a problem – a need for clarity and precision – in the current state of Johannine scholarship. This question, which is definitional and conceptual, constitutes the foundational stage of the problem that this book seeks to address. By raising this question, I am not suggesting that there has been scant scholarly attention paid to σημεῖον in FG. On the contrary, as will be shown in the next chapter, there has been a tremendous amount of research into the subject in the last seven decades or so. However, in my view many of the existing conclusions, for instance, on what the σημεῖα pertain to, are not entirely satisfactory and may not reflect FG's overall teaching. It is part of the task of this work to demonstrate how it is that many of the existing views do not cohere with the whole data of the Gospel.

The second part of the problem, which is the main focus of this book, is definitionally and logically connected to the first. It has to do with the question of the relationship between Jesus' death-and-resurrection³ and σημεῖον. Is the cross-and-resurrection, which arguably is the greatest deed of Jesus and which in FG is conceived as a theological unity, a σημεῖον? While some may think that this question is unrelated to the first, I am convinced that it needs to be asked and answered when one is trying to clarify what σημεῖον pertains to, and what it includes and excludes. Once again, this is not to imply that there are no existing views on this question in current Johannine scholarship. In fact the answer that I hope to defend here will not be entirely de novo, but will build on some of the more coherent views already available. But again some of the main views on the connection between σημεῖον and Jesus' death-and-resurrection do not seem to me to be entirely satisfactory, and the need for greater precision remains.

¹ The occurrences and usage of σημεῖον will be discussed in ch. 3 below. The verb σημαίνειν will be discussed in ch. 4 (pp. 66–69).

² As is also well known, FE nowhere uses the word δύναμις, the preferred term of the Synoptic Gospels for the miraculous deeds of Jesus.

In sum, this book focuses on a two-part problem related to the Johannine σημεῖον. The first part has to do with the referent of σημεῖον and the second part deals with the precise connection between σημεῖον and Jesus' death-and-resurrection.

B. Statement of the Thesis

I seek to articulate and defend a twofold thesis. First, in regard to meaning and referent, I submit that the Johannine σημεῖον pertains to a deed of Jesus – miraculous or otherwise – which FE has recorded in his Gospel in order that the reader may believe in Jesus (20:30–31). I deviate from the common view that understands the σημεῖα as limited to the seven or eight miracles that FE has recounted at length. Second, I submit that Jesus' crucifixion-and-resurrection, as one complex event, is the supreme σημεῖον in FG. That is, it supremely reveals Jesus' identity and mission as the divine Son of God and Savior of the world.

C. Scope and Limits of the Study

Firstly, this is not a study of the miraculous accounts (i.e., the eight miracles recounted in John 2–11, 21), although two of those miracles will be included here (i.e., the multiplication of the loaves in John 6 and the raising of Lazarus in John 11). Part of a long-standing assumption in Johannine scholarship is the belief that the σημεῖα equate with the seven or eight miracles which FE has recounted, so that a study of the Johannine σημεῖα might immediately be thought of by many as an investigation into those miracles. Of course, the σημεῖα may be investigated by precisely that procedure, for the σημεῖα no doubt also include those miracles. However, that is not the procedure employed here. Moreover, I am not a proponent of the view that restricts and confines the σημεῖα to only those seven or eight miracles. Rather, this study is an investigation into the Johannine notion of σημεῖον – what it is and what it includes.

As has been mentioned, I seek to ascertain the term's meaning and referent. Thus, an important part of this investigation is the survey of all the seventeen occurrences of σημεῖον, as well as the threefold use of the verb σημαίνειν.

Secondly, this is not a study of the literary and conceptual backgrounds of the σημεῖα, although I occasionally mention in passing the probable links of the σημεῖα to some traditions in the OT, such as, for example, the Egyptian plagues in Exodus. Rather, this is a study of σημεῖον on the basis of the text of FG as it now stands. There will be no attempt at source- and redaction-critical inquiry.

Thirdly, this is not an investigation into FG's theology of Jesus' death-and-resurrection. Accordingly, I am not going to address such questions as whether or not FG has a "theology of the cross,"⁴ nor will I take account of the various ways whereby the FE has understood the importance of Jesus' death-and-resurrection.⁵

D. Presuppositions and Methodology

In this book I operate from the assumption that FG is a coherent piece of work whose overall message can be successfully discerned by close attention to its language, details, and structure. As to its authorship and provenance, it is not necessary for this work to speculate on the details and espouse a particular view. For instance, when I use the appellation "the Fourth Evangelist" (FE), I do so without presupposing a particular identity.

Methodologically this study is concerned with the meaning and referent of σημεῖον, not from the perspective of (and by inquiring into) putative sources and redaction, but from that of (and by inquiring into) the Gospel text as we now have it. As to Jesus' death-and-resurrection, my concern is narrow and defined. When I argue that Jesus' cross-and-resurrection is the supreme σημεῖον, I am obviously focusing upon its revelational aspects – I am looking at the crucifixion-and-resurrection from the point of view of σημεῖον. But I am not suggesting that this is all that the crucifixion-and-resurrection means and achieves in FG.

⁴ On which see, e.g., Jörg Frey, "Die theologia crucifixi des Johannesevangeliums," in Kreuzestheologie im Neuen Testament, ed. A. Dettwiler and J. Zumstein, WUNT 151 (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2002), 169–238; John Morgan-Wynne, The Cross in the Johannine Writings (Eugene, OR: Pickwick, 2011), 1–211, esp. 132–91.

⁵ On which see, e.g., Udo Schnelle, "The Cross and Resurrection in the Gospel of John," in The Resurrection of Jesus in the Gospel of John, ed. C. R. Koester and R. Bieringer, WUNT 222 (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2008), 127–51.

E. Procedure and Shape of the Argument

Apart from the customary chapters (ch. 1: Introduction; ch 2: Review of Literature; and ch. 10: Conclusion), the bulk of this book as well as the shape and flow of its argument will consist of the following three parts.

First, the foundation of the work is laid in ch. 3 by an analysis of the seventeen occurrences and usage of σημεῖον. What is the overall meaning and referent of this term? Does this overall meaning allow or disallow the inclusion of Jesus' death-and-resurrection in the category of σημεῖον? If the answer is affirmative, the most important implication is that Jesus' death-and-resurrection is not just a σημεῖον, but the greatest σημεῖον. Also in ch. 3 the purpose for the σημεῖα will be briefly considered.

Second, ch. 4 will explore and analyze five Johannine themes – namely δόξα, ὑψωσις, ἔργον, ὄρα, and πίστις – that further support the thesis that the crucifixion-and-resurrection is the supreme Johannine σημεῖον. These thematic studies build and expand on the foundation laid in ch. 3.

The third and final step will occupy the bulk of the thesis (chs. 5–9). Here I am focusing on the exegesis of specific passages that bear on the positive connection between σημεῖον and Jesus' death-and-resurrection. Chapter 5 will deal with the account of the temple “cleansing” (2:13–22). Chapter 6 will analyze the feeding miracle and Bread of Life discourse in John 6. Chapter 7 will focus upon the raising of Lazarus in John 11. Chapter 8 will deal with the account of Jesus' crucifixion in 19:16–37. Then chapter 9 will focus upon Jesus' resurrection and the catena of post-resurrection appearances in John 20. The choice of these passages is not random but is guided by important textual and narrative considerations.

For instance, the temple “cleansing” and the feeding miracle are bound together by the two incidents of the demand for a σημεῖον (see 2:18 and 6:30–31). The temple “cleansing” is significant in its own right because it is Jesus' first appearance in Jerusalem and in the temple during his public ministry. In other words, it is his first encounter with Judaism. The feeding miracle is also significant in its own right because it represents the climax of Jesus' Galilean ministry in FG. With regards to the raising of Lazarus, its primary importance lies in the fact that it directly precipitates the Sanhedrin's decision to put Jesus to death. In other words it is a transitional and pivotal event, ushering in the Jesus' ὄρα, which has been the target of the Johannine narrative.

The remaining two chapters (8 and 9) concentrate on FG's accounts of the crucifixion-and-resurrection. Chapter 8 focuses upon John 19:16–37 because this is the immediate account of the crucifixion. Because my focus is narrowly upon the crucifixion itself, it is not necessary to include the entire Passion account (John 18–19). The same rationale applies to the focus in ch. 9 upon John 20. The catena of post-resurrection appearances in John 20 suffices for the purposes of this book, and John 21, which recounts another post-resurrection appearance, need not be included.

Overall, the work builds a cumulative case for the view that Jesus' crucifixion-and-resurrection not only belongs in the category of Johannine σημεῖα, but also that it is the supreme σημεῖον.

views. One way to classify the research and discussion is by way of methodology and orientation. Many (e.g., Rudolf Bultmann and Robert Fortna) have approached the subject with overriding diachronic interests, focusing on questions of sources and redaction. Other, more recent, scholars have tackled the subject synchronically, with an overriding focus on the literary and rhetorical meaning of the σημεῖα.

Another way of classifying the scholarly discussion, which will be the focus of this review, is based on the question of the definition and referent of the Johannine σημεῖον. What precisely is the Johannine σημεῖον, and what is it not?

At times, one's answer to this question is largely influenced by his or her methodology. For instance, as will be evident below, the σημεῖα-Quelle hypothesis tends to support the view that σημεῖον equates to miracle. Hence in the following review, methodology will be inevitably mentioned.

For heuristic purposes I am going to group the various scholarly views on what is and is not a σημεῖον into two: (1) narrower views and (2) broader views.² These are not intended to be neat groupings. In the narrower views belong two subgroups: (a) non-source-critical views and (b) source-critical views. In the broader views belong three subgroups: (a) the view that includes the crucifixion in the seven or eight σημεῖα, (b) the view that includes the resurrection in the σημεῖα, and finally (c) the view that understands the σημεῖον as referring broadly and inclusively to the deeds of the incarnate Christ. There are two further discussions that fall under the broader views: (a) the notion of the narrated σημεῖα, and (b) the crucifixion-and-resurrection as the supreme σημεῖον.

B. Narrower Views of the Johannine Σημεῖα

A dominant view of the Johannine σημεῖον is that it refers to a miraculous deed of Jesus, so that a non-miraculous deed, no matter how important and/or significant (e.g., the “cleansing” of the temple, or even Jesus’ crucifixion), is not and cannot be a σημεῖον. The majority of the proponents of this view hold that the σημεῖα are found only in the first half of the Gospel, chs. 1–12, which is usually described as “the Book of Signs.” But some other proponents diverge from this and include the miracle in John 21. Proponents also diverge methodologically: some are very much concerned with diachronic, source-critical questions, while others simply focus on the final form of the text.³ In what follows I am going to categorize the narrow views by way of their methodologies: (1) the non-source-critical views and (2) the source-critical views.

I. The Σημεῖα as Miracles: Non-Source-Critical Perspectives

What used to be, and perhaps still is, the dominant view as to what the Johannine σημεῖα mean and refer to is the view that claims that the Johannine σημεῖα are the seven miracles recounted at length in the first half of the Gospel. Many of the proponents of this view come to this conclusion by way of traditional exegesis, without regard to questions of sources and redaction.⁴ The so-called seven σημεῖα are as follows:

² Adelbert Denaux uses the categories of “minimalist interpretation” and “maximalist interpretation.” But he does not discuss the further distinctions and differences in each of these categories (“The Twofold Purpose of the Fourth Gospel: A Reading of the Conclusion to John’s Gospel (20,30–31),” in Studies in the Gospel of John and Its Christology, ed. J. Verheyden, et al., BETL 265 [Leuven: Peeters, 2014], 525–26).

³ It will become clear that most scholars who approach the σημεῖα synchronically tend to have broader views of what the σημεῖα refer to.

1. The miracle of turning water to wine (2:1–12)
2. The healing of the nobleman’s son (4:47–54)
3. The healing of a cripple at the pool of Bethesda (5:1–16)
4. The feeding of the five thousand (6:1–15)
5. Jesus’ walking on the water (6:16–21)
6. The healing of a man blind from birth at Siloam (9:1–17)
7. The raising of Lazarus from the dead (11:1–44)

One may query why the miraculous catch of fish in John 21 is not included in this list. In response, Leon Morris explains:

The miraculous catch of fish in chapter 21 would certainly qualify, except for the fact that this lies outside the public ministry of Jesus. Further, whether or not chapter 21 is from the same hand as the rest of the Gospel, it is agreed that it forms something in the nature of an appendix. If we concentrate on the public ministry of Jesus as this Gospel records it, there are seven signs.⁵

However, contrary to what Morris suggests, the status of John 21 is far from settled, and there are scholars who argue that John 21 is an inherent part of the Gospel, written by the same hand that produced the rest of the Gospel.⁶ Should these scholars then count the miraculous catch of fish as the eighth σημεῖον? Still no, according to Morris, for John 21 lies outside the scope of Jesus’ “public ministry,” by which Morris means the ministry of Jesus prior to the cross.⁷

⁴ E.g., Tenney, “The Meaning of the Signs,” 147–54; Davies, “The Johannine ‘Signs’ of Jesus,” 93; Leon Morris, Jesus is the Christ: Studies in the Theology of John (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1989), 22–3; idem, The Gospel According to John, rev. (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1995), 163, 609; Mark W. G. Stibbe, “A Tomb with a View: John 11.1–44 in Narrative-Critical Perspective,” NTS 40 (1994), 38–40; Schnelle, “The Signs in the Gospel of John,” 232–34.

⁵ Morris, Jesus is the Christ, 22.

⁶ See, e.g., D. A. Carson, The Gospel According to John (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1991), 665–68; Howard M. Jackson, “Ancient Self-Referential Conventions and Their Implications for the Authorship and Integrity of the Gospel of John,” JTS 50 (1999), 1–34; Craig L. Blomberg, The Historical Reliability of John’s Gospel: Issues & Commentary (Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 2001), 272–73; Craig S. ⁷ “Public ministry,” if used to refer to Jesus’ ministry prior to the cross, particularly to John 1–12, may be a misleading term. For, are not the events of the passion and the post-resurrection appearances also part of Jesus’ public ministry? Is not the crucifixion itself the most public act of Jesus’ ministry (see, e.g., 19:17–37)? Of course, with the post-resurrection appearances, their audiences were considerably smaller – the disciples only – but still, that is enough to constitute the appearances public. In other words, we may understand Morris’s

In fact, some other scholars, who are also of the view that the Johannine σημεῖα refer only to the miraculous deeds of Jesus, insist that there are eight of these σημεῖα: the miraculous catch of fish in John 21 included.⁸

II. The Johannine Σημεῖα as Miracles: Source-Critical Perspectives

Some other scholars, who are also of the view that the Johannine σημεῖα refer exclusively to Jesus' miraculous deeds, adopt a source-critical methodology. Although the source-critical approach to FG has become at present a minority approach,⁹ it is still worth mentioning here.¹⁰ I am going to limit the following discussion to Rudolf Bultmann's Σημεῖα-Quelle hypothesis and to Robert T. Fortna's "Gospel of Signs."

1. Rudolf Bultmann's Σημεῖα-Quelle Hypothesis

Rudolf Bultmann is well known for, among other things, his complex source-critical views of FG.¹¹ He believed that FG in its present form is not the original view of the σημεῖα as confined to the miraculous deeds of Jesus performed prior to the cross. But this view is contradicted by 20:30–31, where σημεῖα in its immediate context pertains to the appearances of the risen Lord and where, as will be argued below, the expression ποιεῖν σημεῖα most likely pertains generally and inclusively to the deeds of Christ during his earthly ministry, whether miraculous or not, both before and after the cross, and even including the cross.

⁸ See, e.g., B. F. Westcott, The Gospel According to St. John: The Greek Text with Introduction and Notes, 2 vols. (London: John Murray, 1908), 1:cliii; Donald Guthrie, "Importance of Signs," 72–83; Robert Kysar, John: The Maverick Gospel, 3rd ed. (Louisville: Westminster John Knox, 2007), 14, 95–7; R. Alan Culpepper, "Cognition," 253; Kasper B. Larsen, Recognizing the Stranger: Recognition Scenes in the Gospel of John, BibInt 93 (Leiden/Boston: Brill, 2008), 112–13; Anthony M. Moore, Signs of Salvation: The Theme of Creation in John's Gospel (Cambridge: James Clarke, 2013), 132.

⁹ Some recent source-critics of FG include Folker Siegert, Das Evangelium des Johannes in seiner ursprünglichen Gestalt: Wiederherstellung und Kommentar, SIJD 7 (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 2007); Michael Theobald, Das Evangelium nach Johannes: Kapitel 1–12, RNT 4/1 (Regensburg: Pustet, 2009), 32–42; Urban von Wahlde, The Gospel and Letters of John, 3 vols., ECC (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2010).

¹¹ Bultmann provided no systematic formulation of these views, and they are scattered across the pages of his magisterial commentary The Gospel of John: A Commentary, trans. G. R. Beasley-Murray, R. W. N. Hoare, and J. K. Riches (Philadelphia: Westminster), 1971. For a critical examination and discussion of Bultmann's literary theory see D. Moody Smith, The Composition and Order of the Fourth Gospel: Bultmann's Literary Theory (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1965). For a comprehensive historical survey and critical evaluation
