Preface

This book is the result of a long-standing fascination of mine (not to say, obsession) with a well-known episode from the Synoptic Gospels, the story of the raising of Jairus's daughter and the intervening incident with the unnamed woman who had suffered from haemorrhages and was instantaneously healed by Jesus (Mark 5:21–43; Matt 9:18–26; Luke 8:40–56). My earliest more professional engagement with the episode dates from 2004, when I was invited to teach an MA-course on New Testament Exegesis at the Vrije Universiteit Amsterdam and decided to take this story from the “triple tradition” as my basic text. Little could I then foresee that I would be lecturing on this gospel story for a decade and a half on all academic levels and in various institutions (Vrije Universiteit, the Protestantse Theologische Universiteit, locations Amsterdam and Utrecht, and in the early stages of this project also the Christelijke Hogeschool Ede). Needless to say that I have much profited (and still do) from the constant interaction with my students and colleagues.

Looking with hindsight on my previous publications, I realize that I seem to have a strange attraction (to start with a circumfession) to absent people. My doctoral dissertation was on the ascension of Jesus and on how early Christians sought to come to terms with his seemingly permanent absence.¹ A few years later I published a book on the choice of a successor to Judas Iscariot, on a pericope in which the two dominant figures, Jesus and Judas, were both conspicuously and problematically absent.² Now that I submit a book about Jairus's daughter and the haemorrhaging woman, I am aware that once again I have wrestled with the absence of at least one more person: a dead young girl. I get the feeling that Jacques Derrida's notion of absence is on to something! Perhaps it is now time to inscribe/circumscribe the notion of absence into my intellectual biography.

Thanks are due to the members of our two-weekly Amsterdam New Testament Colloquium (Nieuwtestamentisch Werkgezelschap), in particular to my colleagues Bert Jan Lietaert Peerbolte, Jan Krans, Peter-Ben Smit and our two esteemed emeriti, Tjitze Baarda (†) and Martinus C. de Boer, to the participants of the Seminar on Memory, Narrative and Christology in the Synoptic Gospels of the Studiorum Novi Testamenti Societas (SNTS), and to the members of the Dutch-Flemish Studiosorum Novi Testamenti Conventus (SNTC).

My PhD Seminar of New Testament studies of the Graduate School of Religion and Theology conducted in the Fall Semester 2018 provided me with ample opportunity to discuss the ins and outs of my work with doctoral students, colleagues and other specialists in the field. Special thanks are due to Vincent van Altena, Wolansa Asmare Asfaw, Yimenu Adimass Belay, Tessema F. Gechera, Kirsten van der Ham, Marc Lamain, Elias Tranefeldt, An-Ting Yi, Drake Williams, Marten van Willigen, Theo van Willigenburg, and Ruben van Wingerden. I feel blessed with them all.

I am most grateful to the editors of WUNT for accepting this work in this prestigious series and to the editorial staff of Mohr Siebeck for their careful supervision of the final stages of this project.

Last but not least, Cisca my life companion. Who would I be without her?

This book is dedicated to the memory of Tjitze Baarda who “in his old age was still producing fruit” for generations to come (Ps 92:14 NRSV) and thereby left a deep imprint on all of us.

Introduction

This is a book about a first-century Jewish man named Jairus and his twelve-year old nameless daughter who was on the verge of death. It is also about an anonymous woman who had suffered from haemorrhages for twelve years, and about a first-century miracle-worker, Jesus, and his disciples, three of them in particular. It is also about three authors, traditionally called Matthew, Mark and Luke, and about first-century communities in Palestine and the wider Mediterranean world in which their gospel stories were told and passed on. It is about the interaction of readers, both ancient and modern, sympathizers and critics alike, with these ancient stories. And in all this it is about method.

The aim of this study is to investigate the famous gospel story of Jesus's healing of the haemorrhaging woman and the raising of Jairus's daughter (Mark 5:21–43; Matt 9:18–26; Luke 8:40–56) with the help of various exegetical tools and interpretive reading strategies to find out whether they produce knowledge and understanding of the texts under scrutiny (and if so, what kind of knowledge and understanding), and, conversely, whether the tools and methods to be used are in need of revision under the pressure of the communicative situation in which they are being applied. Hopefully, this undertaking will not only be of help for the guild of biblical studies, but for the interpretation sciences in general.¹

This study is structured as follows.

Chapter 1 (History and Research) is an extended research report (Forschungsbericht) of the episode's history of interpretation, a journey through time in which a number of once popular, now long-forgotten interpretations and suppressed memories are being reviewed. This survey will create an initial awareness of the exegetical issues involved and of the wide variety of interpretations offered by earlier generations and contemporary scholarship. I will then define common ground and identify a few gaps and blind spots in the current study of the episode. This will set the agenda for further investigation.

Chapter 2 (Text and Translation) deals with what is traditionally called philological criticism. Focusing on matters pertaining to word and sentence meaning, grammatical, syntactical and stylistic issues, rhetorical devices and semantics, it delves deep (some will argue, too deep) into the finesse of the individual gospel writers' use of language and the readers' understanding of the textual phenomena. At this point the wide range of exegetical decisions to be taken will be made as lucid as possible.

Chapter 3 (Structure and Form) examines the structure of the three Synoptic pericopes, their internal cohesion and their placement in the individual gospels. Its aim is to find out if and how the pericopes' embeddedness in a particular gospel context adds to their meaning. While the general form-critical classification of the episode as a miracle story is virtually undisputed, its function is a matter of unresolved dispute. Why was this story told in the first place? Was it to convey a message about Jesus, as the older form critics believed? Was it to promote a faith commitment and encourage readers to follow the examples of Jairus and the bleeding woman? Or to learn from the girl's deadly state about one's own miserable state? Or was it perhaps to promote an egalitarian or at least a woman-friendly view relevant to leadership issues in the early church, as some feminist reader-response critics have suggested? What does the intertwining of the two stories mean for the exegesis of the texts? What are the effects of the Matthaean and Lukan adaptations of Mark's allegedly "purer" form?

Chapter 4 (Tradition and Redaction) takes us back to more traditional historical-critical questions. It is diachronic in its approach and focused on the stories as texts, written artefacts. It studies the texts in the light of their prehistory and editorial transmission. In the light of recent reassessments of tradition- and redaction criticism in favour of orality hypotheses, the question of sources needs to be reopened or at least restated.

Chapter 5 (Orality and Performance) ties in with current debates on the nature of textuality, literacy, memory, orality and performance. It seeks to describe and examine recent claims about the inadequacy of the literary mindset over against oral approaches, and explores the implications for our understanding of the pericope and, if possible, for a tentative reconstruction of its prehistory. This, to be sure, is not a main concern for the average orality scholar, but the historical question, I believe, is still a legitimate and relevant one.

Chapter 6 (Story and Narrative) deals with narrative criticism and is to some degree an attempt at synthesis of the previous chapters. As recent studies in narrative criticism show, ideology plays a significant role in trying to understand "what the text is all about." From recent work on socio-critical exegesis, esp. feminist criticism, a number of relevant questions emerge. What is (in the implied author's view) the identity of the haemorrhaging woman? Is she Jewish or gentile? What, if any, is the role (or not) of Jewish purity regulations? Does the story have anti-Jewish implications? What are the underlying rhetorical agendas of the respective narrators? Why is the story told in this particular way? And how do we know?

In Chapter 7 (Summary and Conclusions) the implications of the foregoing chapters are spelled out and loose ends tied up: how does a multiple reading strategy help to “understand” the texts? How do competitive research methods add up to establish meaning and foster understanding?

For reasons to be explained below I decided to place a chapter on textual criticism at the very end of this investigation (Appendix 1: Text and Transmission), that is, after the actual investigation of the texts. In a second appendix the marginal references in the outer margin of NA²⁸ and its predecessors are documented and analysed in an attempt to penetrate into the intertextual embeddedness of our pericopes and to test the quality of the now fully revised apparatus (Appendix 2: Text and Intertext). Third, an overview is given of the earliest (second- and third-century) reception of the story, in which the haemorrhaging woman and Jairus’s daughter go their own way, although both become embroiled in gnostic speculation (Appendix 3: Reception and Wirkung). In the bibliographic section I offer a chronological bibliography on the pericopes of Jairus’s daughter and the haemorrhaging woman from 1900 to the present (A), which hopefully helps to get an impression of the flow of scholarship over time, and a general bibliography that includes all works consulted in this project (B). As will be evident from the Table of Content, I assume Markan priority as my working hypothesis throughout the book – but no more than that: I am open to and will engage with alternative solutions to the Synoptic problem.

In a sense this exegetical work could not have been written before I had completed my two-volume work on the history of biblical hermeneutics.² In this work I explored the complex interaction between text and reader, and sought the come to terms with the still-unsolved hermeneutical problem. Biblical exegesis is not only about texts then and there; it is also about readers here and now and about everything in between. In several places of the present work the attentive reader will recognize the impact of Hans-Georg Gadamer, Paul Ricoeur, Anthony Thiselton and Umberto Eco, to name but a few of my hermeneutical sources of inspiration.

Chapter 1

History and Research

A. Introduction

The story of the raising of Jairus's daughter and the healing of a haemorrhaging woman belongs to the so-called "triple tradition," the common material found in the gospels (commonly known as) of Matthew, Mark and Luke.¹ The episode is found in Matt 9:18–26, Mark 5:21–43 and Luke 8:40–56. It has no parallel in the Fourth Gospel, although Karl Ludwig Schmidt long ago surmised a connection with the healing of the royal official's son in John 4:46–53.² Some other scholars are impressed by some curious points of correspondence with the episode of the raising of Lazarus in John 11:1–54, such as the death of both characters before the delayed arrival of Jesus (John 11:6, 17; Mark 5:35 par.) and the misunderstood outlook on death as "sleep" (John 11:11–13; Mark 5:39 parr.). All in all, however, in their present gospel

setting they are entirely different and unrelated stories, according to most biblical scholars to date.³

The differences between the three versions – especially between Matthew on the one hand and Mark-Luke on the other – are well-known and numerous attempts have been made to explain them. While in Matthew the petitioner is an unnamed ruler (ἄρχων εἰς, Matt 9:18), both Mark and Luke assert that his name was Jairus and that he served as a synagogue leader (εἰς τῶν ἀρχισυναγώγων ὄνοματι Ιάϊρος, Mark 5:22; ἀνὴρ φόνομα Ιάϊρος ... ἄρχων τῆς συναγωγῆς, Luke 8:41). According to Matthew, on the first meeting with Jesus, the father informed Jesus that his daughter had just died (ἀρτὶ ἐτελεύτησεν, Matt 9:18) and made a request for him to come along to raise her from the dead (ζήσεται, Matt 9:18).⁴ According to Mark and Luke, the child was on the verge of death but still alive when the father came to Jesus (ἐσχάτως ἔχει, lit. “she has it lastly,” i.e. “she is on the verge of death,” Mark 5:23; αὐτὴν ἀπέθνησκεν “she was dying,” Luke 8:42): his request was for the healing of his daughter, not for her resuscitation. In comparison to Mark and Luke some features are strikingly absent from Matthew, such as the accompanying crowd,⁵ the haemorrhaging woman’s address to Jesus (Mark 5:33; Luke 8:47), the dramatic report of the messengers from the ruler’s house evoking Jesus’s words of comfort (Mark 5:35–36; Luke 8:49–50), and the information about the girl’s age, which happens to correspond to the duration of the haemorrhaging woman’s illness (Mark 5:42; Luke 8:42). Furthermore, at the height of the story Matthew allows no bystanders to witness Jesus performing the resurrection miracle (Matt 9:25), while in Mark and Luke the room where the miracle takes place tends to become somewhat overcrowded with Jesus, Jairus, his daughter, his wife and three of the disciples, Peter, James and John (Mark 5:37, 40; Luke 8:51). In addition, the narrative context of the Matthean version, notably its spatial setting, differs from Mark and Luke considerably: Jesus and his disciples seem to be in a house in the company of “many tax collectors and sinners” where they are being visited by disciples of John the Baptist (Matt 9:9–13, 14–17),⁶ whereas according to Mark and Luke Jesus had just disembarked from the boat that had brought him back from the country of the Gerasenes and was now by the lake side surrounded by a large crowd, presumably in open space (Mark 5:21; Luke 8:40). Further discrepancies can be added but those listed here seem to be the most prominent and have understandably been subjected to much painstaking research from an early period onward. In the history of interpretation numerous explanations have been offered to account for these differences, with differing degrees of complexity, ingenuity and plausibility. In what follows I will map the major lines of the history of interpretation to see where a common ground has been found and where such agreement has not yet been reached. This will clear the ground for further investigation.

³ See Rudolf Schnackenburg, Das Johannesevangelium II: Kommentar zu Kapitel 5–12, 4 vols., HThKNT 4 (Freiburg: Herder, 1971), 428–429, for a list of corresponding items. He reaches the conclusion: “Im ganzen gehen die Berührungen kaum über formgeschichtliche Elemente hinaus” (429). See also Jacob Kremer, Lazarus: Die Geschichte einer Auferstehung: Text, Wirkung und Botschaft von Joh 11,1–46 (Stuttgart: Katholisches Bibelwerk, 1985), 43–45. For a survey of recent scholarship on the relation of the Gospel of John and the Synoptics in general, see Frans Neirynck, “VI. The Gospel of John,” The Four Gospels 1992: Festschrift Frans Neirynck, BETL 100 (Leuven: Leuven University Press, Peeters, 1992), 1721–2221; idem, “John and the Synoptics: 1975–1990,” in John and the Synoptics, ed. ⁴ Cf. ein “dann wird sie wieder lebendig.”

B. Harmonizing Attempts

In precritical times the obvious discrepancies between the various versions of the story have not gone unobserved and were sometimes given ample treatment, not infrequently for dogmatic and apologetic purposes. Under the influence of a strong conviction of the unity of Scripture, it was simply held impossible that Scripture would contradict itself or contain any error in what it affirmed. For this reason harmonization has always been a popular and attractive means to tackle so-called “alleged discrepancies,” including those in the present pericopes, although not each expositor or commentator felt the urge to advance a solution or give an opinion on the matter. For example, Tatian seems to have willingly passed over (or ignored) the discrepancies in his Diatessaron by simply conflating the more elaborate versions of Mark and Luke, allowing little or no influence from Matthew at this point.⁷ When, however, the whole problem was not passed over in silence,⁸ the solution was usually sought in either psychological or literary or historical terms.

⁷ Tatian, Diatessaron 12 (ANF 9:62). See on Tatian, Klaus-Gunther Wesseling, “Tatian der Syrer,” BBKL 9 (1996): 552–571. Cf. also Ephrem the Syrian, Comm. Diatessaron 7.1–27, FC 54/1:272–293, where the haemorrhaging woman receives much more attention than the dying girl. In the Old-Saxon Heland, a ninth-century life of Jesus in the tradition of the Diatessaron, the story is absent, although it does contain the raising of the widow’s son at Nain (Luke 7:11–17) (26:2167–2231) and the raising of Lazarus (John 11:1–44) (49:4025–4117). See Heland: Een Christusgedicht uit de vroege middeleeuwen. Uit het Oudsaksisch vertaald en ingeleid door Jaap van Vredendaal, aangevuld met fragmenten van de Oudsaksische Genesis vertaald door Redbad Veenbaas, met medewerking van Willem van der Meiden (Amsterdam: Sun, 2006).

1. Psychologizing Explanations

First, in a homily on Matthew John Chrysostom (ca. 349–407 CE) neatly wove the three synoptic accounts into one coherent, conflated narrative. Observing the obvious conflict with Luke,⁹ who mentions the arrival of someone saying that Jairus's daughter had died, he suggested in a homily on Matt 9:18 that the expression ἄρτι ἐτελεύτησεν “was that of one [sc. Jairus] conjecturing from the time of his journeying, or exaggerating his affliction” (στοχαζομένου ἦν ἀπὸ τοῦ καιροῦ τῆς ὁδοιπορίας, ἡ αὔξοντος τὴν συμφοράν), a reaction which Chrysostom thought was fully understandable in such a moment of great distress.¹⁰ Obviously, the ruler simply thought that by now his daughter had died and he was only confirmed of it when the messengers from his house came to tell him so. Chrysostom's solution was taken up by Theophylact, Luther, Grotius, Johann Albrecht Bengel, Johann Peter Lange, and many more.¹¹

Second, Augustine of Hippo (354–430 CE) also clearly acknowledged the differences between Matthew and the other gospel writers. Like Chrysostom, he opted for a psychological explanation but with a somewhat different twist: Luke and Mark reported what Jairus said on the occasion (namely that his daughter was on the verge of death), Matthew what he wished and thought, namely that his daughter who he thought dead by now would be raised from the death: “duo itaque posuerunt, quid dixerit Iairus, Matthaeus autem, quid voluerit atque cogitaverit.”¹²

Third, in a similar vein the Reformed New Testament scholar William Hendriksen argued in more recent times for some sort of editorial conflation: “According to Mark and Luke, Jairus had first asked Jesus to heal the child; then, when informed about her death, had been urged by the Lord not

⁹ Mark's Gospel was less popular or at least less cited at the time than Matthew's and Luke's.

2. Two Different Events?

While these attempts tried to harmonize two or three reports of what presumably had been one and the same event, other scholars felt uncomfortable with these solutions and tried to alleviate the tensions by claiming that Matthew and Mark-Luke were simply reporting two different incidents. Pride of place for this line of interpretation goes to the sixteenth-century Lutheran scholar Andreas Osiander (1537), who was otherwise notorious for his ingenious harmonizations.¹⁴ He held that Matthew reported the raising of a daughter of an unnamed leader or government official (ἄρχων, i.e. “magistratus rei publicae gubernandae praefectus”), whereas Mark and Luke related the raising of the daughter of Jairus, the synagogue leader (ἀρχισυνάγωγος, i.e. “ceremoniarum magister”). In Osiander’s opinion, the intervening incident with the haemorrhaging woman reported by both traditions related to two different women and to two different historical events, one reported by Matthew, the other by Mark and Luke.¹⁵ The eighteenth-century scholar Gottlob Christian Storr (1786), the founder of the Old Tübingen School, also argued for two different occasions on which Jesus both raised a girl back to life and healed a woman with haemorrhages.¹⁶

3. A Translation Error?

Given the close agreements of Mark and Luke against Matthew, a number of interpreters have tried to explain Matthew's disagreement in terms of a translation issue. Already in the early eighteenth century Johannes Olearius (1713) wished to translate the words of the Matthaean ruler as est morti proxima, "she is near death" rather than "she has just died," thereby conforming Matthew to the others.¹⁷ Almost a century later he was followed by the theologian and classical philologist Christian Gottlieb Kühnöl with the same explanation (1807).¹⁸ In his study on the original language of Jesus a century later, Arnold Meyer made a passing reference to older attempts (e.g. Johann David Michaelis) to detect a Hebrew original behind ἄρτι ἐτελεύτησεν supposedly to mean "sie liegt am sterben" (הָנָה הָנָה).¹⁹ In more recent times this harmonizing translation of Matt 9:18 has been adopted in the Holman Christian Standard Bible, "My daughter is near death" (HCSB), the MacDonald Idiomatic Translation of the New Testament, "My daughter right now is on the verge of death" (MIT), and in the 1973 NIV New Testament, "My daughter is at the point of death".²⁰ The Dutch New Testament scholar Jakob van Bruggen, in a similar vein, interprets the phrase somewhat ambivalently as "the girl has entered the terminal phase."²¹

In his commentary on Luke, another Dutch New Testament scholar, Seakle Greijdanus, claimed that Matthew's version represents the historical order of events over against that of Mark-Luke.²² Hence the meeting with Jairus did not take place immediately after Jesus's return from the other side of the lake but only after the events referred to in Matt 9:1–17, events that Luke had already reported earlier in his gospel.²³ Matthew's ταῦτα αὐτοῦ
